FR. COYLE READS CHEMICAL PAPER

At the general convention of the Chemical Society of America, Georgetown University was not without representation. As some two thousand chemists of prominent importance throughout the United States gathered, the District of Columbia opened its gates to the men of science to learn the advancements and achievements of the chemical field. Numerous papers and topics relating to the application of the science were presented to the organization during their one week's stay in the National Capital.

Rev. George S. Coyle, professor of analytical and inorganic chemistry at Georgetown, read a paper on "Pioneer Applied Chemistry in North America." Father Coyle, who was a member of the committee during the convention, is a figure of much importance in the chemical field. His ability in this branch of science is something for the Hilltop University to be proud of. Indeed his work has reached many sections of the country and without doubt has received much attention and praise.

During their session in Washington, the chemists of our country also witnessed one of the greatest displays of war material possible to be shown off the battlefield. Edgewater was the scene of the shambles battle in which chemical warfare was demonstrated.

Georgetown University had as its guests during the convention Rev. George Pickle of Prairie du Chien College; Rev. Arthur Homan, former professor of chemistry at Georgetown and now of Boston College; and Rev. Michael Arens, professor of Chemistry at Holy Cross College.

Members of the Georgetown faculty, who attended the convention, are: Rev. George S. Coyle, head of the department of Chemistry; Mr. V. A. Gookins, professor of inorganic chemistry and Mr. James Loughrey, assistant professor of chemistry.

The largest reception ever given at the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service, took place in the form of Brazilian night, last Saturday evening. Representatives from the embassies and legations of France, Italy, Cuba, Mexico, Portugal, Ecuador, China, Persia, Colombia, Venezuela, Poland, Haiti, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Greece and Egypt, were among the numerous gathering.

The introductory remarks, made by the Rev. John B. Creeden, S. J., President of the University, were followed by greetings in Portuguese, delivered by Mr. Antonio E. Dufault, a member of the student body. Dean Notz, of the Foreign Service School, extended the greetings of the faculty and then Mr. William A. Red, Lecturer in the School of Foreign Service, gave a lecture on "Brazil of Today," illustrated by motion pictures on the commercial aspects of that country. The gathering was next addressed by the Honorable Samuel de Sousa, Leao Gracie, Chargé d’Affaires ad interim of the Brazilian Embassy.

Medal Struck.

For the first time in the history of the Foreign Service School, a medal was struck by the United States Mint to commemorate the auspicious occasion. The coin presented had on one side the shield of the University and on the other an inscription to Mr. Gracie. The Rev. W. Coleman Nevil, S. J., Vice-President of Georgetown, and Regent of the Foreign Service School, made the presentation of the medal, which lay in an attractive blue and gray case entwined with the colors of the United States and Brazil.

Fr. Nevil stressed the appropriateness of tribute unum as applied not only to God and country, upon the shield of utraque unum as applied not only to God and country, upon the shield of utraque unum as applied not only to God and country, upon the shield of utraque unum as applied not only to God and country, upon the shield of utraque unum as applied not only to God and country, upon the shield of utraque unum as applied not only to God and country.

JESUIT LAW SCHOOLS

The following appeared in the Creightononian, organ of Creighton University, in the issue of April 3rd:

While the eyes of the people have been turned upon the activities of Catholic colleges in both scholastic and athletic pursuits, they frequently fail to consider the advantages which are attached to the law courses which these colleges have at their disposal; especially is this true of the Jesuit colleges. The legal fame of many Catholic institutions has been heralded throughout the world, but like mention is given to the standards forwarded by the Jesuit law school. Although some of these universities possess the law course in its infancy, they are constantly exhibiting better standards and consequently have larger enrollments.

Of the fourteen Jesuit institutions of learning which teach law in the U. S., there are only two which show a decrease from the first semester of 1922 until the beginning of the fall term of 1923. During the month of October the official number of students enrolled in the Jesuit law schools was given as 4,513, which number in itself is not to be passed over lightly.

From these statistics is shown the fact that a greater interest is being taken in this particular course of law.

The ensuing table will show the list of Jesuit schools of law and their enrollment for the fall of 1923:

DEUTSCHERVEIN MEETS

The Deutschervein of the Foreign Service School held its regular meeting at the Concord Club last Thursday evening at which several matters in connection with the interest of the club were discussed. The club's constitution was ordered printed. Dr. Spanhoofd discussed German parliamentary usages and the members spent some time in their practice. Plans for affiliation with the national union of Deutscherverein were considered. The club hopes to send delegates to the national convention next fall at one of the eastern universities. Refreshments were served in the bar of the club and some of the members then took part in an old-fashioned German "Tanznacht" of one of the local German societies.

To Exhibit in Hoya Room, Friday, May 9
At the first meeting after the Easter holidays, on Wednesday, April 30, the question: “Resolved, That the Johnson Immigration Bill is a direct violation of our treaty with Japan,” was discussed in the White Debating Society. Messrs. Rimp and Namack, the affirmative, debated against Messrs Hugh McGowan and Brady. The debate was extremely interesting throughout and the question was well handled by both sides. The society awarded the decision to the negative side and elected Mr. Francis Brady the best speaker of the evening.

The Gaston Debating Society met Thursday evening, May 1, and debated the question which has been selected for the Gaston-White Debate: “Resolved, That amendments to the Constitution should be ratified by a direct vote of the people irrespective of the number of States.” Messrs Dean and Corbett, the affirmative, argued against Messrs Brennan and Cahill the negative. The debate was interesting and produced much interest in the question which Gaston and White will soon debate. Mr. Brennan was elected the best speaker and the negative side was awarded the debate. In the lively extemporaneous debate Mr. Castellini was chosen the best speaker of the evening.

Next Tuesday’s a good time to snap out of your “old” and into your “new”.

Our representative will be in the Hoya Room as usual.

"My kingdom for a horse!" and Hamlet fell dead. Swords, bricks, broken parapets, ammunitions, broken glass and bricks were flying about the stage for a few minutes and then Hamlet came down on "Hamlet," the latest work of one of our leading dramatists, about which I have no comment to make. It is, however, written in a manner that is most successful, one of his most successful hits and melodramas. The report of word that this was a good time to interview someone, so amid a roar of falling bodies he approached Charles Clayton.

"Jay, did I die gracefully?" he asked. I assured him he looked as pleasant as possible under the circumstances, and he fell back, dead again.

"But what is the secret of your success, Mr. Clayton?" I asked, in an effort to make the most of the moment. "It is the simple fact that you are a most successful editor."

"There are some. I know that they have a performance this Saturday night, with a special matinee, Friday only." The reporter and quite a few others remained around to see if the ghost would make any moves or do any writing. But this is a well-behaved ghost, entering only when supposed to, speaking only when supposed to, and sometimes, not even then.

"Charley, what do you think of the American stage, today?"

"Oh, I don't know, because we are all out of beards now.

"Have you any regrets about this position?"

"I have been graduated. I started out as scene shifter in Louisville's Down on F Street. After a few weeks of this preparatory work, I was promoted to assistant scene hanger. It has been long and hard."

"While we were talking the scene shifters of Trinity Hall were busy. One minute we were in a castle, the next we were in a garden. Just as I was about to pick a flower the scene changed and I and I picked a skull from the grave yard. Rosencranz and Guildenstern, just a couple of the boys, came skating up and the scene changed to platform of a one-man street car."

The presentation of "Hamlet" by the Mask and Bubble Club this Friday and Saturday, will win deserved praise for its impression in the tournaments and matches in which they have participated. Captain Kunkel is optimistic about Georgetown's chances for success in the remaining rounds at the Columbia Country Club and hopes to achieve the same position in the final results as that of last year.

THE WANDERER RETURNS.

(“Ring.”)

As Rip Van Winkle returned to the scene of his childhood, so the writer returned to the scene of former joyous occasions; and as Rip found his village changed immeasurably, so did the scribe find the Hall of Correction. Before describing the exact state in which I found my brief sojourn among those inferior body for three weeks. In that all too short a space of time I grew to love the low-enthusiasts I had only the greatest heights it was my sad lot to be forced to take, daily, inestimable numbers of good-will. Before ascending to the heart that knocks within, "Ain't-It-Iron" in order to keep alive the that I arose at the prescribed hour and in the inquisition like chamber I was was in the words of the sky-poet the horrors of that ill-fated night are my reveille. Thus did I suffer for two identical hour which had hitherto been my revivele. Thus did I suffer for two long, nerve-wracking weeks, until finally the joyous message arrived that I was once more promoted to the company of my fellow miscreants. In my day-dreams I conjured up vision of the future nights spent in mirth and uproarious hilarity—of leagues uninterupted that continued far into the so-called wee small hours. Oh, shades of the dead! I would I were a Merlin or even a Thurston that I might once again, by the aid of black magic restore this feudal stronghold to its former superlative degree of brilliance and splendor. But, alas! that cannot be. When I first entered that hall, so dear to me I was amazed and held spellbound by the quiet that prevailed. Not even the customary salutation, "What again!" greeted my triumphant entrance into the select circle where once I was reckoned with the best in my profession. But few greeted me from every black-walnut bed sadly changed. New faces, new voices in the once magnificent room where in All was as quiet as the ordinary house voices proclaimed to the inhabitants of Peace. On the pages of tny memory is said to be on Xmas eve. No loud tomb prevails. (Although things are by the quiet that prevailed. Not even those in the "air-container" are the quiet those in the "air-container" are the cream of the school—all at the top.) Quoting from that "wet" song, "Then Days is Gone Forever," I but don't forget forever is a long, long time.

GETTYSBURG LOSES IN FAST CONTEST

Jenkins Displays Rare Form. Wins Own Game by Single in 10th Inning. Gettysburg Nine Sets Fast Pace But Weakens.

Showing great form, Homer Jenkins occupied the mound last Friday afternoon and succeeded in outclassing the Gettysburg nine by a score of 4 to 3. The second period of the game was in rapid form as was the Keystone hurler, but the final tally showed Jenkins mastered the situation a little better than his opponent. During the early periods of the contest Gettysburg showed up well both in the field and at the bat. It took ten innings to decide the issue and it was the Blue and Gray moundsmen, who won his game by getting a terrific single in the fatal tenth.

Hagerty's single, Madd's sacrifice and Jenkins' timely coinception sent in the winning score for the winning nine.

The game proved to be one of the best played on the Hilltop field in some time. Full of sensational plays and brilliant baseball, the Gettysburg fans acquired a new enthusiasm for the game ball art. Rorbaugh, the Gettysburg twirler, ran in splendid form until the latter stages, when Sheely was sent to relieve him and hold the Gettysburg nine from gaining a victory, but his attempt were in vain.

YEARLY AFFAIR STARTS WELL

First Annual Affair at the Raleigh. The Rev. W. Coleman Nevills, Vice-President of the University, is Guest. Choose Men For Sec Tempore Debate.

Last Wednesday evening, the Hotel Raleigh was the scene of the first annual banquet given by the Philodemonian Debating Society. A large number assembled, among whom, as the principal guests of the evening were, the Rev. W. Coleman Nevills, S. J., Vice-President of the University; Mr. Robert Woodruff, member of the Endowment Drive, and Mr. Frank Mulligan, S. J., Chancellor of the Society. A large number also attended the work of the lecture teams throughout the evening and was well attended all who attended.

The principal speaker of the evening was the Rev. W. Coleman Nevills, S. J., Vice-President of the University. He addressed the people of the hospital in a word of encouragement and said that their work was the most enjoyable and promising work that the University had ever undertaken. He spoke of the good result they had obtained from the work of the lecture teams throughout the year. He said that the good impression created by the work of the lecture teams throughout the city, and urged the continuance of this invaluable branch of debating.

Mr. Frank Mulligan, S. J., was the next speaker. He began by thanking Mr. Nevills for attending the affair and expressed the hope that the work of the lecture teams throughout the city will be a welcome relief to the monotonous shocks which are practically of daily occurrence, it may be the better policy to confine their architecture to one and two-story buildings. However, the buildings that are standing in this city today are not a result of concrete affairs of American construction and it seems to me that some structures like these would be a welcome relief to the monotonous architecture of the present day. I am sending you a few pictures which may show the result of the work and hope that will prove interesting to you. Also a snapshot of the continuance of these shocks which are practically of daily occurrence, it may be the better policy to confine their architecture to one and two-story buildings.

WITH THE STUDENTS OF FOREIGN SERVICE IN EUROPE

By Connie R. Herbon.

The towers colored with the burning rays of the Spanish sun, the white houses of Granada scattered amid the olive-clad slopes of the valleys and hills, the romantic entrance to the Gypsies' Caves, and in the distance the majestic summits of the Sierra Nevada with their wreaths of eternal snow, make a panorama of which Granada scattered amid the olive-clad beauty, and the impossibility to convey an idea to those who have not seen it. Madrid and Barcelona.

In all of Spain there is not a more restful spot than Leja, high in the Sierra Nevada mountains with its cool, refreshing springs, and above all a retreat from the scorching rays of a Spanish sun, a lazy village without the usual hustle and bustle and only two Fords to break the monotony. One hotel that, though small, was far superior to any we had yet been in and the only one the rates were extremely reasonable. Our lodging, including a ride in the two Fords to and from the station, dinner and breakfast cost only two dollars. We made friends with many of the people and were given a reception. Why? It was so seldom that any out sider ever stopped and above all tourists never bothered with so small a city, we were students and introduced ourselves as ($$$$) and of course, the literary critic was considering locating a large factory in some secluded spot which was to receive them as ($$$$) and of course, the literary critic was considering locating a large factory in some secluded spot which was in a sense created more hospitality on their part. We were sorry to leave Leja and it shall remain in our memories long. Again we boarded a rattler and after a few hours' ride were in Madrid.

Madrid is a more Americanized city than any other in Spain, of course, being the capital, it is a cosmopolitan city and one finds no difficulty in speaking English with the people. The Puerta del sol is all that the name implies; but a feature not before seen in Spain was a subway which radiated from the door of the sun. We visited the government buildings and loll'd in the parks or drank carveza in some cafe. We were warned by the American Ambassador that one should not drink of the water as it was full of germs. We readily accepted his advice and had a Johnny Walker before each meal. The death rate was very high and we saw as many as thirty funerals in one day. Needless to say we soon left Madrid and started for Barcelona.

Lack of space prevents me writing of our visit to Toledo, Burgos, Cordoba, and Malaga, but on our way to Barcelona we stopped for a short time at Zaragozamore for a rest from the monotonous clanking of the rails.

We arrived at Barcelona about five in the evening and at once checked our baggage at the station. We had planned to seek the tenderloin district for we had heard much of it. We went to the Hotel Cristobal Colon and secured a room while we knew that there were many inhabitants in the mattresses we did not care for where in Spain are they not.

Barcelona is the main part of Spain, and a center for manufacturing so we spent several days in investigating textile factories, shipbuilding, and dock facilities for loading and unloading. One of the most modern cafes was found. Who would think that in Spain there would be found an automat? We spent one whole morning in the market place looking over the method of distribution, facilities, sanitation, and efficiency of handling. (To be continued)

PATHFINDERS ELECT OFFICERS FOR YEAR

Memory Expert Addresses Club. Interesting Talk Followed by Election of Officers. Executive Committee Chosen.

Last Sunday evening in the Hirst Library, the members of the Pathfinders Club listened to a very interesting lecture by Mr. Nutt, a memory expert. Mr. Nutt has been conducting a course in the improvement of memory for the employees of many prominent banking and business institutions for a number of years. In his talk he went on to show the value of a well ordered and efficient memory.

"It is of great advantage to call by name a man, whom you have met but once and then see him again after a considerable lapse of time," he said. Also an invaluable aid in business is the mental filing and retaining of each fact and figure. Mr. Nutt closed his address by a practical demonstration of his course.

Following Mr. Nutt's address the club elected its officers for the year. They are Mr. John Haller, '24, President; Mr. John T. Rice, '24, Vice-President; Mr. Herman Kleincke, '24, Treasurer, and Mr. Joseph McQuillen, '24, Secretary. An executive committee was chosen consisting of Messrs. John H. Daly, '24; James M. Egan, '24, and Eamond D. Murphy, '25.

John Mattare, M. D., '19, has been appointed instructor in anatomy.

Professor Moran, M. D., who was recently ill, has returned to his duties in the obstetrical department.
