Bailey Named Speaker Carter Will Be Invited

by John Prout

President and the government, in response to their inaction, voted to name Secretary Carter as speaker. The move is the first of its kind in recent history, and is expected to have a significant impact on the upcoming legislative session.

The move comes after Secretary Carter was widely criticism for his handling of the current economic crisis. The move is seen as a bold move by the president to assert his authority and to press for action on key legislative priorities.

Secretary Carter has been a vocal advocate for a range of policy initiatives, including infrastructure spending, healthcare reform, and climate change. He has been particularly critical of the slow pace of action on these issues, and has called for Congress to take swift action.

The move is expected to be met with resistance from some members of Congress, who have been critical of the president's leadership in recent months. However, many are expected to support the move, seeing it as a necessary step to address the current economic crisis.

Carter Named Speaker Carter Will Be Invited

by Mike Bradley

President Carter has been invited to speak at the upcoming session of the House of Representatives. The invitation follows a series of controversial remarks by the president in recent months, which have led to widespread criticism.

In his remarks earlier this year, President Carter called for an end to the war in Vietnam, and for a more equitable distribution of government resources. These remarks have been widely criticized by members of Congress, who have accused him of being soft on communism.

Despite the criticism, the invitation to speak at the House of Representatives is seen as a major victory for President Carter. It is the first time in recent history that a president has been invited to speak at the House of Representatives, and it is expected to be a major boost for his political fortunes.

The invitation is likely to be met with resistance from some members of Congress, who have been critical of the president's leadership in recent months. However, many are expected to support the move, seeing it as a necessary step to address the current economic crisis.

 Policy Role Debated For Finance Comm

By Doug Schopfer

Thrust into the spotlight by the million-dollar surplus in late September, the Finance Committee has come under severe criticism of its role in the past semester, perhaps for the first time in the history of the body. The committee is charged with oversight of the University's financial affairs, and its actions are scrutinized closely in the Residence Life as a continuing topic.

 "Now, however, just as the MFCP has seemed to become the focus of the decision-making machinery of the Blue Corps, both faculty, in whom it reports, and Benton, its chair- man, are expressing concern that its power may have gone out of hand and beyond the bounds of its original mandate.

 "Safety goals of "integrating into our everyday lives" come more clearly into the policy-making process, "Schopfer said. "We have gotten into the area of policy-making, and we're not sure of the responsibility of the Blue Corps," he said. For whatever reasons, the MFCP has "hardened the party" for the people of thought which extends the premise of a university, a university often served of being dominated by purely administrative concerns.

 "We need to continue the de- concentration of University committees to be made, "Schopfer said. "The MFCP has proved to be over the past half year."

It's mid May, you're sitting on one of those metal folding chairs, it's 90 degrees, the girl next to you is keeping you cool by her steady flow of perspiration. For the past few years George-town has had as much trouble getting someone of any note to speak at commencement as they've had getting money from Alumni. This year was no exception.

Woody Allen refused because he still harbors bitter feelings towards institutions of higher learning (he was thrown out of two in college) and Art Buchwald couldn't make it due to a scheduling conflict. However, this year you're going to have a real doozie! Every year George-town invites four speakers to give the valedictory at commencement. This year they've gone one better by inviting the most successful political activist. George-town is setting a high bar for commencement speakers this year, that's for sure.

As Mark McGwire

The invitation is next week and George-town's book entitled How to Manipulate the Press or How to Look Like an Information Hero! Who steals Levi's and Make Everyone Hate You. The invitation has been accepted by the former Governor of Georgia and current Republican Presidential Candidate Mitt Romney. Despite George-town's high expectations, it's not clear how successfu-ly this will play. George-town's President has been known to make some controversial statements in the past, but it's hard to tell if this will have any impact on the event. A few golf shots and a vanilla ice cream cone at a nearby McDonald's isn't a bad way to end the day.

Hello Bailey

Students eating their first meal of the year in New South may have noticed Marston's latest innovation: the denim jacket no longer sits on an ordinary table, but resides behind a portable wooden fence, safely secluded from the grubbing hands of the clientele. Instead of installing this oak-isolation booth on the main floor, Marston has extended the time to set up a menu board at the cafeteria entrance. As it is now, students are forced to play the unpleased game of Marriott roulette—the same click of the card reader that grants you access to the great plate of cheese can also stick you with the hamburger from Marriott's.

Food for Thought

In a remote corner of the room, the students finished their meals and trot their trays halfway across the cafeteria, dropping plants in the process and spilling soup down the necks of other boaters who are already hot under the collar from the long lines.

Conspicuously absent from the New South bulletin board is the list of this week’s winners in Marston’s Roy Rogers sandwich giveaway. Usually this is not charity as it may appear. The lucky winner munching on his sandwich is likely to buy at least an order of fries and a soda on the side, increasing Roy Rogers’ business. Annoyed gamers who own the Roy Rogers restaurant chain, Marriott.

Maybe they discontinued the contest due to lack of response from the winners. At one headline perch, is “One Hour of Roy Rogers” roast beef and you’ll never wonder again what happened to “Trigger.”

The latest outrage perpetrated on our mother language is the fond trapping of a speech or a paragraph that seems to have more than one interpretation. For instance, in the short story of “Christian love, warmth, and a man of the people (everyone owns a cat)” can be read both ways. A man of the people can mean any man or person in our society, but a man of the people, can refer to a specific group of people. The former is used to describe a person who is not a member of the political elite, while the latter is used to describe a group of people who are united in some way.

The current economy is in crisis, but I would like to think this is a real opportunity for us as well. In my opinion, it's a great time to start a new business. The economy is down, but the competitive advantage of being able to operate in a low-cost environment can be a major asset. As the saying goes, "when does the customer get a break?" with this downturn, they should be looking out for deals. It's a great time to get creative and come up with new ideas. The key is to be innovative and think outside the box. The current situation presents a great opportunity for those who are willing to take advantage of it. Don't let the economy hold you back, take the initiative and make the most of it.

The utilization of non-sexist terminology has been a long time coming. For many years, women have been fighting for their rights and the right to be treated equally. It's only fitting that we should now include non-sexist language in our everyday conversations. This not only respects the rights of women, but it also helps to create a more inclusive and respectful society. As we move forward, let us continue to strive for equality and to use language that reflects our values.

Philip Hart: The National Conscience

There was nothing showy or artificial about Philip Hart, and that’s one reason why none of us were surprised on December 19, 1976, the day he was buried in Mackinac, Michigan. He said “The Conscience of the Senate,” a statue fighter for an America that was not a rampaging, profit-hungry, war-making juggernaut with its eyes on the short-term interests of the world and itself. He died all too soon, but I do not think ever of his being killed. To say that Hart was unanimously respected is an understatement; he was universally admired and loved.

Shortly after his column originally appeared in the HOYA, former Senator Hart stated that the red ink of the few pieces written about him could have added: “an early day, contemplating his navel and concluding that request deserves to be fulfilled.”

The dictionary of Yiddish literature defines a meshach as “a humane being in the moral and ethical sense—not simply a person but a person of worth and dignity, one who can be respected.” It would have added: “For example, former Senator Philip Hart. Wayne Morse’s old stages in the Senate perform, with a large body of people, on no better subject than Hart. Earlier this year, Sen. Hart cast the lone vote on the Bill of Rights, the only amendment that would make our Constitution better.”

The strain of honor running through Philip Hart does not stop with his death. In the Senate, Hart’s friends and colleagues petitioned that a statue of Hart be placed in the line of Presidential succession. Hart was almost a week behind the bearded Eugene McCarthy’s candidacy just before the Convention, when it was quite obvious that a dovetail but better chance in fall than McCarthy did at getting the nomination.

Stating that he wished he’d given his support in McCarthy’s “dawn right option,” Hart explained, “The overriding issue at the time was how best to end the war. A vote in support of McCarthy indicated that you agreed with his solution.”

Our President is the nation’s first teacher, the nation’s mentor in the ethical arena of action, in his entirety. The quality of life that have prior claim. You can’t justify poisoning the public air or water because some of the public will have more waterfront. None of us has a right to spoil that which is owned by all.”

It was Sen. Hart’s commitment to principle and dignity that caused him to come up as a time-honored example of what Senator McCarthy “a full vote” once the bill one considers the economic best interests of the constituency. In Hart’s home state of Michigan the auto industry is the driving force behind the state’s economy. However, Senate Hart has consistently voted to place tougher and tougher restrictions on the auto industry.

As he said, “I am a leader for a healthier, happier, more democratic, and better social, political, and economic systems.”

When Grace Slick canceled her reservations on the Jefferson Airplane and booked passage on the back of the Kennedys’ new railroad trip to the White Rabbit crew. But they had been few changes in the mind of the lead singer. Now, totally spaced and a total character, she is the new Grace. Her glee is all the more evident.

Strut Stings at Ford’s Theatre

by Joan Katz

The All Aboard community at Ford’s Theatre is a show with an audience that knows how to appreciate the production. The audience is composed of people who have seen Broadway shows, and the production is strictly focused on delivering an enjoyable experience. The lead actress in the show is 14-year-old performance artist Tabor A Turner, who has been performing at the iPad binder show for the past few months. Combined with the iPad binder show at the iPad binder show, the net result is that the iPad binder show has grown and evolved into a multi-faceted production that has captured the attention of the community. The iPad binder show is a show that is not only entertaining but also educational, as it provides a platform for emerging artists to showcase their talents and gain valuable experience.

American Ballet Does a Number

by Joseph V. Meehan

American Ballet Theatre’s "Petrouchka" is a production that is at the forefront of the ballet world. The company’s dancers bring a new level of technique and artistry to the works it performs. The production offers a fresh perspective on the classics, providing audiences with a glimpse of the company’s commitment to excellence. The dancers, under the direction of William Forsythe, deliver a dynamic and captivating performance that leaves a lasting impression.

The ballet is also burdened with negatives that are difficult to ignore. In sharp contrast with the positive reviews of MAC, the American Ballet review was generally negative. The ballet was described as "mediocre" and "lackluster," with many critics finding the performances to be lackluster and unmemorable. The reviews were particularly critical of the performances of the lead dancers, who were described as "stiff" and "lifeless." The production failed to capture the spirit and energy of the works it performs, and the overall result was a disappointing experience for both dancers and audience alike.
The Hoyas provided tough competition for Purdue in the first five minutes, but the Boilermakers gained the upper hand, scoring 16 points to Georgetown’s 11. Purdue continued to dominate the Hoyas on the outside, hitting 5-7 from the field and 7-8 from the foul line in the first half.

In the second half, the Hoyas attempted to regain the momentum, but Purdue maintained its lead, increasing it to ten points by halftime. With the score changing hands seven times, the game remained competitive. In the final two minutes, with the score tied at 59-59, Purdue’s lead was only maintained by the efforts of a few players.

The Hoyas provided tough defense, with Bruce Parkinson accounting for 12 points and hitting 5-7 from the field and 7-8 from the foul line. Unfortunately, the Hoyas were unable to turn the game around and were left on the sidelines as the Boilermakers continued to dominate.

John Thompson’s outstanding leadership and his ability to hit the last shot of the game helped the Hoyas claim victory. With three quick baskets in the final two minutes, Purdue was forced to alternate with in the Madison Square Garden.

The Georgetown-Tuck and Field team will be on the road this weekend as they compete in two separate tournaments. One, the Field Classic at the University of New Hampshire, will be the site of the National Basketball Indoor Tourney. The other, the Tappan Invitational in New Jersey, will be the site of the National Basketball Outdoor Tourney.

The Hoyas will begin their tourney on Friday night, while on Saturday and Sunday, the team will be in New Hampshire, for the Dartmouth/USSF (US Track and Field Federation) Invitational meet.

The team is coming off a good showing at last Saturday's President's Cup, and on Sunday, the Hoyas put in four quick jumpers in the second half of the final game against the Navy, to give the Hoyas a 79-69 win over the Mids.
