Controversy Surrounds Campus Security
A committee in a large University community was set up to review campus security. The committee was augmented by the recommendations of the reports of the Task Force on Campus Safety.

A sub-committee of the Task Force recommended that a campus security system be established. The sub-committee felt that the system should include a combination of security officers, security cameras, and an emergency response system.

The Task Force recommended that the system be implemented in phases, with the first phase focusing on the University's main campus. The second phase would involve the University's off-campus facilities, and the third phase would involve the University's satellite campuses.

The University administration agreed with the recommendations of the Task Force and has allocated funds for the implementation of the security system. The system is expected to be fully operational by the end of the year.

L.A. Times Journalist Relates Soviet Ordeal

by John Orton

"If the Soviet Union pushes you and you don't push back, then you're going to push you again. This is the basic philosophy of the Soviets," said former Moscow correspondent for the L.A. Times Robert C. Toth, in a speech to the American-Arabian Student Association.

Toth, who was working on the West Coast during the L.A. Times, focused on his recent arrest and trial experiences. Following Soviet assertions that he was a spy, Toth explained the Soviet policy toward journalists and diplomats.

The Soviets view those who work for Western governments as spies. This view was confirmed by Toth's trial, which took place in Moscow.

Business School Offers D.C. Area Internships

Upper Classmen Assist Council
Students Bank on Intern Jobs

By Carol Widmar
The School of Business Administration's SBA 111 is sponsoring a City Council Internship Program for undergraduates interested in public service careers. The program, slated for the fall, offers Georgetown juniors and seniors the opportunity to obtain hands-on and 'real world' experience by working in the office of one of the Council members.

Councillor William Sparkle, who originally conceived the idea for the internship program, and who was specified by a bid of 250,000 personnel to Council member's offices. Randy Collins, an economics major, says "The SBA's Program provides tremendous experience for the student. We learn about the world." The way theory & practice are merged together.

SBA is expected to work on 15 or more bills a week, all with a paper at the end of the semester. SBA is expected to analyze the problems on which they worked. SBA is expected to analyze the problems on which they worked. SBA is expected to analyze the problems on which they worked. SBA is expected to analyze the problems on which they worked.

The intern's duties involve attending on the Senate hearing and working on research proposals for the different agencies under the committee's jurisdiction.

Mike Totten, an economics major, cousin Councillor Bruce Byrnes, the junior senator from Wisconsin, Barney Byrnes, has acquired several additional responsibilities besides his work on tax reform issues. His duties consist of doing budget studies and determining the cause of the new emergencies. In spite of the heavy work load, Totten says he enjoys his internship.

Lloyd Campbell, student coordinator for the program, works with each intern to present them with the current legislation and bills. "It's a great experience," she says, "to be a member of the Council's committee." Campbell believes this is a very valuable experience for students who are interested in public service careers.

The purpose of the program, according to Byrnes, "is to involve the student in the real world." In Byrnes opinion, the program is going extremely well.

The positions, though available to all students, are still being offered to the students. Totten says he is excited to get the opportunity to work for the Council, as a response to a small committee of his own.

Committee Studies Proposed PIRG Referendum

By Chris Blake
A student referendum on mandatory student funding of a social action fund being filed by a committee of students and administrators, according to Dean of Student Affairs William Scott. The committee is deciding whether the University should continue to fund the DC PIRG (Public Interest Research Group) under the Graduate Student Association (GSA) was a referendum that was approved by a student referendum, and by a majority vote of 34 percent. The agreement allows a DC PIRG form to be submitted to the National Park Service for the next fiscal year. The student body voted to have a referendum on the GSA PIRG, which is a proposal organization from PIRG, the local chapter on campus.

The amendment with the University was continued without opposition. The amendment was passed by the University, which is in favor of the University. The amendment was passed by the University, which is in favor of the University. The amendment was passed by the University, which is in favor of the University. The amendment was passed by the University, which is in favor of the University.
It is rather hard to believe that it has been a month since more than 1,000 students from the university and the campus were assembled in front of Copley Hall and the Quadrangle. The concert was organized by the Student Movement, a coalition of student groups that seeks to make the university more responsive to student demands.

The Purpose of the Concert

The movement’s main goal is to demand that the university make changes in its policies and procedures. It has been active since last fall, when it began by calling for the resignation of the university’s president, Thomas S. Donaldson. The movement has also called for the creation of a new student government, the reinstitution of the university’s honor code, and the end of the university’s relationship with the National Rifle Association.

The movement has held several protests and rallies on campus, and it has also held a series of meetings with university officials. It has also been involved in several legal battles with the university, including a lawsuit over the university’s decision to remove a statue of a Confederate soldier from campus.

The movement’s leaders say they are planning more protests and rallies in the coming weeks, and they are encouraging students to participate.

The Middle East: To Two Views of the Situation

Rostrum/ Robert Goodhouse SFS '79

Last month Anwar Sadat did what no Arab leader had ever done. In September (1975/76), he spent a special peace-seeker's round to the world for what many considered a "madman," President Carter. Carter's peace making efforts were branded a "重磅". Thus Sadat's move has been lauded and loved by some as a step forward, while it is criticized by others as a step back.

It is sad that no Arab leader should give up so much in an effort to bring peace to the Middle East. I was torn between my feeling of support for Sadat and my feelings for Israel's decision to withdraw four times from Egyptian territory. Israel withdrew her troops four times from Arab lands without getting recognition and peace in 1949. World leaders with- drew from Lebanon, Lebanon and then Sinai and the Gaza strip, in 1956 from both the West Bank of the Suez Canal and from the Sinai region. In 1967 she withdrew within the United Nations Agreement with Egypt from occupied areas and out of the Sinai. The present boundaries provide huge economic advantage (doubled borders, natural borders, larger aerial proximity), unique immediate value, and new strategic air base.

Sadat's move, therefore, gives to Israel and her troubled people a "beautiful present" initiating the Palestinian problem, a problem which is more serious than any other in the Middle East. It was more than just a decision; a man, a choice, or threat; it was his final choice. It falls naturally. It is the last which should be made for our concern.

For your record, I wish to point out that the claim of the University of Maryland that "The University System of Maryland, including faculty members who are employed on a part-time basis, have not been surveyed" is not true. In fact, the University of Maryland has conducted a study of part-time faculty members and has found that over 10% of the faculty members in the University System of Maryland, including faculty members who are employed on a part-time basis, have not been surveyed.

Claudia Weill: Making It Happen

by Bill Haney

Claudia Weill and Melanie Mayron were two of the stars of the film, Girl Friends. Weill won her first Oscar for her direction of the film, and Mayron was nominated for her performance in the movie. During the filming of the movie, Weill and Mayron enjoyed each other's company and became close friends.

Weill had been a part of the world of film for many years before Girl Friends. She had worked as a production assistant and then as an assistant director on several films before making her directorial debut with the film. Weill was known for her distinctive style and her ability to create a sense of intimacy and realism in her films.

Girl Friends was a film about a young woman who is trying to make it in the world of film. The film was critically acclaimed and was a commercial success, opening the doors for Weill's career as a director.

The film was shot on a tight budget and with a cast of unknown actors. However, Weill was able to create a sense of realism and intimacy in the film, which helped it to be successful.

Weill continued to work as a director, and her films were known for their ability to capture the essence of a moment and create a sense of intimacy.

The film was released in 1977, and it was a critical and commercial success. The film was nominated for several Oscars, including Best Director and Best Picture, and it won several other awards.

Overall, Claudia Weill's career as a director has been successful and has contributed to the world of film in a unique and distinctive way.

Stott Sees Improved Athletics

by Chris Blake

A study of the function of athletics in education at Georgetown was suggested by Dean of Student Affairs Williams Stout at a meeting of the Student Life Policy Committee on Monday, October 1.

"I feel very positive about the possibilities of athletics at Georgetown, especially in terms of the exceptions of the average student, I think they have an opportunity here to make meaningful and creative valiant efforts of the education of the whole person," said Stout.

Stout explained that he would like to continue with达到了 within the university that would "now in its change working but that a full scale exploration of the function of athletics at Georgetown." He added that the general philosophical questions should be approached along with the specifics such as the function of varsity athletics, how many varsity programs should be supported, and which sports should be stressed.

He recommended by Stout that the committee be set up by the end of this semester and a report be completed by October 15.

The SIPC invited Stout to speak on any possible changes in policy governing student athletics, since athletics has been put under the charge of Student Affairs. In light of this, Stout said, "I am in the process of studying the history of athletics here at Georgetown and in general trying to consider it in the context within which Student Affairs operates." He concluded his remarks by saying that "The athletic department looks for whatever it is that our athletes are interested in and need changes over time to make them better and to inclusively involve more people. I think the need for it will be involved in the function of athletics." He then explained that he would like to begin a study of the function of athletics in education at Georgetown, and in that process he is working on the general philosophical questions such as the function of varsity athletics, how many varsity programs should be supported, and which sports should be stressed.

"We must not forget that athletics must be a part of the education of the whole person and that the average student, I think, has the opportunity here to make meaningful and creative valiant efforts of the education of the whole person," said Stout.

Stott emphasized that he was open to and interested in getting Stott's ideas and suggestions from anyone; faculty, student-interested in singing are urged to come. No special skill was required, just a good spirit. The rehearsals will be held in McNair Hall from 7:30 PM to 9:30 PM. For more information, call Cindy 797-9817, in the evenings. Harriers in Lehigh for NCAA Preliminaries

by Maureen Sullivan

They say that practice makes perfect and practice is exactly what the Hoyas track team will be getting when they run in the Lehigh Invitational tomorrow. The meet was included in the ICCA cross-country schedule when the NCAA instituted a new ruling stating that a meet must be participated in the national meet, must fall qualify for the District or regional championship. District I, which Georgetown is part of, must have a meet within a year to a year and a half. A November 11 at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania — the same course that the Hoyas will be running on tomorrow. So people will be studying and evaluating the terrain for future reference.

This ruling, by the national governing body of collegiate sports, is intended to give all schools an equal opportunity of qualifying for the prestigious NAIA District I championship and the NCAA District I championship.

Unbeaten (2-0) Hoyas to Face (3-0) St. Pete's

National Offensive, Defensive Leaders Clash in Home Opener

by Paul McKeen

Returning from a successful weekend at the Temple University Invitational in Philadelphia, the Georgetown Volleyball team was determined to raise their regular season record to 6-0 by handing defeats to Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville, Maryland and Towson. They hope to secure a home sweep Saturday when they face the (3-0) St. Peter's University Peacocks.

Freshman full back Gary Fanning was the big story as the Hoyos defeated the Fighting Hawks 27-26, 15-31, 15-0, 15-15, and 15-15, in two tough games, the women qualified for the second round ahead of the tournament bracket, which is composed of the top two teams from each of the four regions.

In the first round of championship competition, this weekend's two games were decisive. The Hoyas were victorious in the second game, 15-5, and then won the second round against the host team, Temple University.

The Hoyas lost the games 15-12, 15-12, and 15-10, but dropped the third, 15-11 after a rough transition. This loss forced the Hoyas into the consolation bracket for their final two games.

But, for these fans, the victories come few and far between. Perhaps more indicative of the team's overall performance, the worst fans are arrogant, but it is apt.

The Hoyas are now 15-15 after a tough transition. This loss forced the Hoyas into the consolation bracket for their final two games.
