A copy of the requisition slip was delivered to the President’s Office, and Meng later visited the Corp’s Office to inquire about the status of the requisition.

GUTS Change Causes Confusion

March 3

by Greg Kowalewski

It parted with the best of intentions: Students standing along the bus route from the Visitor Center to the Medical Center, Millie was always on time for early-morning classes.

At the intersection of Life, the GG Transportation Society was coordinating the turn between the Imperial 400 and campus. What happened to the schedule rolling up the 8:30 a.m. departure window?

The only hint that we have is that the line was considerably slower than usual. Some 14, seven dozen crows were seen in the vicinity of the bus stop, while those further away, where the bus had failed to appear, were the usual Pavlovian response.

According to Frank Pond, one of the members of the GG Transportation Society, they are taking over the operation and the buses will still be at the stop. "Go down to the Village and be finding your bus," Pond said.

The GG Transportation Society is responsible for finding the buses and bringing them to the stop.

Chavez speaks

continued from p. 1 and that's it. "You'll see, and that's it," he said. "It's going to be a win for you."

After pausing to laugh, Chavez summed it up, "We're going to win. WCLP keep 7 if you want, you'll lose it, please don't waste through the whole thing."

Chavez also criticized the graduate assistants for their lack of response. "At least once a month," he said, "the graduate assistants go to the graduate council to have a meeting."

While the protest may seem like a waste of time, Chavez is sure that the graduate assistants are listening. Even if they don't come to the meetings, he believes that they will have a voice in the next generation of students.

When asked about Chavez, Brown's assistant, "I didn't know he was there," said a graduate assistant.

"Brown is a doctor of philosophy," he went on, "and he's going to be a professor next year."

When asked when the protest will begin, "I don't know," said the assistant. "I'm just going to keep trying and keep trying."
First Things First

In the beginning, the institution known as a university was simply two sections: the faculty and the students. The faculty taught, or performed research, the students learned. Eventually, however, the university became big business, and the faculty members found they no longer had time to perform research. Students were given resources and, in some cases, access to the university's budget. They did not have to contribute. Throughout the 1980s, many undergraduate classes were crowded, and more and more graduate programs were facing extinction. In the spring of 1979, then Academic VP Rev. Aloysius McCaffery, S.J., made the administration realize that the university had to turn down funding for new programs because of lack of space to house them. The Intercollegiate Center would not suffer all of our needs.

Equally pressing is the problem of skyrocketing tuition. If quality students run the university, this will defeat the admissions office's efforts to plan to expand their recruiting efforts. Dean of Admissions Charles Denado's findings that higher tuition increases the pool of applicants are as about as credible as the official's claims that accessing American universities at the Moscow Book Fair constitutes the highest affirmation of freedom of speech.

Going Once, Going Twice...

Everyone knows you can't buy the Brooklyn Bridge.

You can still buy a University education, however, though some students have been working at that. With the projected shortage in college-age people, the university is in a tight market for students. This has led to the implementation of a set of measures to increase student enrolment. One of the most significant has been the introduction of a new system of student fees. This system is designed to improve the quality of life on campus and to increase student enrolment. It has been successful in improving the quality of life on campus and in increasing student enrolment.

Coming Clean

A severe shortage of laundry tickets has taken campus by surprise. The HOYA argues that this situation is not due to the administration but to the students themselves.

Dear Reader:

The administration has been forced to take action in order to ensure that the laundry facilities are open and available to everyone on campus. This has been a difficult decision, but it is necessary to maintain the quality of life on campus and to ensure that everyone has access to the facilities.

Sincerely,

Your campus' friend,

President of the University Community Council

Have We Got A Deal For You

Times are good. Capitalism is prospering, the city is in the midst of a construction boom, and the university is struggling to keep up with the student body and the over the ledge thanks to a spring rain.

Riggs came to Georgetown three years ago, replacing a bank that had previously handled students' financial needs. At that time, students believed that Riggs was catering to their every need. However, over time, Riggs has become more of a service provider, rather than the educational institution it once was.

The university, on the other hand, has been trying to keep up with the growing student population. With more and more students enrolled, the university is faced with the challenge of providing adequate resources and support.

The Office of Student Life has been working hard to improve the student experience. They have implemented new programs and services to help students succeed. However, there is still more work to be done.

In conclusion, while the university has made some efforts to improve the student experience, there is still a lot of work to be done. We must continue to work together to ensure that all students have the resources they need to succeed.

Nick Lowe Reaches A High With Cruel To Be Kind

by Paul Drusett and Kevin Delaney

Nick Lowe seems to be striving for something progressive and concise in his latest effort, "Cruel To Be Kind." Although it is not the most memorable of his albums, it is still a hit. The title track, "Cruel To Be Kind," is a superb example of Lowe's talent. It is a simple, yet powerful song that deals with the pain of unrequited love. Lowe's voice, always a highlight of his work, is particularly effective on this track. The rest of the album is also good, with notable songs like "American Squirm" and "Diamonds in the Rough." However, the album does lack the overall cohesiveness that Lowe's previous work has shown. Still, "Cruel To Be Kind" is a pleasant surprise and a good addition to Lowe's discography.

Toy Lacks Direction; Few Good Moments

Generally, foreign language films are enjoyed according to the belief that their quality is ignored and passed over by people who do not stop to consider their worth. This truism of the movie trade is similar to that of the foreign trade. It is interesting to note that the trade of foreign film distribution, once praised for its adventurous spirit, is now quite different. The Carpenters are no longer the trailblazers they once were. The foreign film is now an established genre, and the popularity of foreign films seems to be waning.

Airport ’79 Crashes

As for the future, it is the usual load of Chicago-to-Los Angeles round the clock, of these, it seems that only Richard Wagner has been selling out to unionists (he knows, the same except basic facts). As it stands, North Kare, and Lydia, my friend, the one woman Surrey, is a TV woman who understands these arts sales and Wagner finds it necessary to kill her. The free film will be a good one, and it looks promising now that it is in the hands of the students. Wagner could not have been made off-kid, but these plans are vitally nonexistent.

Hopkins Tops Soccer Team

By Mark Neuman

In a match played in front of 500 people at the University of Pennsylvania's Roberts Field, Hopkins defeated Penn, 1-0, by a one goal margin. Although the number of spectators at the game, Hopkins as a member of the Ivy League wasn't flush with the number of spectators at the game. The fans were abundant by the数百 in the stands. In fact, the stands were so crowded that many fans had to stand on the field to watch the game.

Coach Thad Connors was not impressed with the match. He said, "Our team was unprepared for this match. We will have to improve our performance in the next match." Despite this, he praised the efforts of his players. "They gave their best effort in the game," he said.

Despite the loss, the team is still optimistic about their chances in the upcoming season. "We have a lot of talent on this team," Coach Connors said. "We just need to work on our teamwork and communication." The team is looking forward to their upcoming match against Columbia next week.

Marchiony Appointed Information Director

By Joe Brown

Georgetown University has appointed a new Information Director, Mike Marchiony. Marchiony will be responsible for working with the university's sports teams, including the Hoyas men's and women's basketball teams.

"Mike is an excellent fit for this role," said Athletic Director John Norlander. "He brings a wealth of experience to the position and we're looking forward to working with him.

Marchiony comes to Georgetown from the University of Washington, where he served as Assistant SID. According to Norlander, Marchiony's expertise and skills will be valuable assets to the Hoyas.

The appointment will be announced at a press conference on Monday afternoon.
