Course Description and Goals:

This course examines legal reactions to the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS). Specific areas of inquiry include criminal law, domestic relations, education law, employment discrimination, estate planning, human rights laws and ordinances, immigration and international travel, insurance law, international human rights laws, military law, public and private health care law, sports law, tort law, and problems of health care institutions. The course seeks to discover elements of the jurisprudence of AIDS; distinguish appropriate and improper influences upon the development of statutes, regulations, and judicial decisions; and apply statutes, regulations, ordinances and jurisprudential principles from other areas of law to new and emerging legal issues in the arena of AIDS.

ADDITIONAL NOTES REGARDING THIS CLASS

Class Attendance: The university's policy on class attendance requires regular and punctual class attendance. Irregular classroom attendance may result in an involuntary withdrawal, which will affect a student's grade point average just like an F.

Grading: Students must elect within the first 3 weeks of the semester whether to have a take-home examination or write a short paper. (Papers will be due by July 23, 1992 in the Health Law Institute Office.) For both the take-home exam and papers, final grades may be raised or lowered up to one letter grade based on class participation.

Plagiarism in Papers and Take-Home Examinations: With a short summer semester, some students may find that there is simply not enough time to complete the research necessary for a paper and to do original writing. Students must avoid and resist any temptation to plagiarize.

The official University definition of plagiarism is that: "Plagiarism is a major form of academic dishonesty involving the presentation of the work of another as one's own." Plagiarism includes but is not limited to the following:

the direct copying of a written source, whether published or unpublished, in whole or in part, without proper acknowledgement that it is someone else's copying of a written source in whole or in part with only minor changes in wording or syntax even with acknowledgment

the paraphrasing of another's work or ideas without proper acknowledgement submitting as one's own work a report, examination, paper or other assignment which has been prepared by someone else; this includes research papers purchased from any other person or agency submitted as one's own work the contents of a computer file prepared by another person

Videotapes: Some class sessions include short videotapes. If you miss a class session, you are nonetheless encouraged to view the videotape on your own time, by special arrangement with the teachers. Students wishing to view videotapes a second time are also encouraged to do so.
