The photograph of the South Pavilion of the Healy Building on this page will recall Hilltop memories to any Georgetown man. It may even lead him to reflect that things here are pretty much the same as when he used to be a student here. It is true that the Potomac bluestone that makes up the building shown in the picture is a fabulously durable kind of granite and will probably be here a long while; even the gargoyles and projections that adorn the towers, the corbel table that enhances the facade, the oval tracery of the windows remain unchipped and intact, as in the '80's when they were put there. But just the same there have been some exciting changes inside the walls you see here.

The first floor of this section of Healy Building houses the School of Foreign Service Library, and the remaining area to the roof houses the main stack, processing and service areas of the Riggs Memorial Library, which is the main Library of the University. Incidentally, all of the books currently purchased by the School of Foreign Service Library are listed in the catalog of the main (Riggs) Library, and students of the different schools may use both libraries interchangeably, for either reference or borrowing purposes.

Perhaps the most radical physical change inside these walls in recent years has been the renovation last year, under the supervision of the Reverend Edward Powers, S.J., Physical Plant Administrator, of the loft, or attic which extends from the south end of the building to the bell tower on the right of the picture, and way beyond it. The attic has formed an increasingly integral part of the Library as the years have sharpened the space crisis; thousands of volumes of books, periodicals, government and municipal documents, pamphlets and other materials have found their way there. Like all attics, this one was dusty; things got put there gradually because there was no place else to put them, or because they were not urgently needed at the time. It was from this "omnium gatherum" that Father Wilfrid Parsons, S.J., formerly Director of Libraries and now recently returned to our staff as Consultant in Rare Books, culled many of the antiquated and curious old imprints that went into his now famous Early Catholic Americana (Macmillan, 1939), the standard bibliography in its field. From the attic came also some of our present collection of 65 incunabula. And from it came a good many of the books that we are currently cataloging in order to convert them from their attic state of lonely disuse to active service on the Library's shelves.

We mentioned dust. That is where Father Powers comes into the picture, for it was he who planned and executed "Operation Dustproof" and thereby transformed the attic from a bibliographical Siberia to an extension of the regular stacks. In older days, no one would think of trying to use the attic without wearing a smock and preparing for a bath afterwards. Moreover, in winter an overcoat was de rigueur; while in summer it was a contest between the demands of modesty and physical survival. Now all that is changed. The entire attic is dustless and, better yet (for we have made it dustless before) dustproof; the Johns-Manville insulation has enabled us to work there in comfort during the winter by retaining the interior heat and will, we are told, do the same thing for us in summer by repelling the exterior heat. By working on the attic throughout the coming summer, and by installing steel shelf units to replace the temporary wooden shelves now there, we hope by this time next year to effect a complete

IC-4A Grand Slam for Hoya Runners

By Rod Thomas
Reprinted by permission of the Washington Star

Here's a bit of news for Charley Capozzoli! When the great little Georgetown runner won the intercollegiate 2-mile championship last year he completed a slam for the Hoyas in the flat-race titles of the IC-4A, extending from the 100 yard dash to 2 miles.

It was a fact not known even to the Georgetown coaching staff until a check was begun recently on past performances of the university's track stars. Naturally, the check was made as a result of the Hoyas' success in track this winter.

The Blue and Gray was 56 years in completing the slam while at the same time winning many other intercollegiate outdoor and indoor track titles.

Twenty-one such titles were revealed in the early stages of a compilation of Georgetown track achievements ordered by Athletic Director Jack Hagerty following the recent performances of Capozzoli, Carl Joyce and Joe LaPierre. The Hoyas are back in the national headlines in track competition, a distinction they've enjoyed periodically for more than half a century.

The parade of Georgetown champions started auspiciously in 1896 when Bernie Wefers of Lawrence, Mass., tied the world record for the 100-yard dash at 9.8 seconds, then broke the world mark for the 220 in 21.8 seconds. This happened in the intercollegiate championships on Travis Island, N.Y.

But a faster runner than Wefers was to appear shortly at the Hilltop, although one won't find his name in the official list of record-breakers. On May 31, 1902, Arthur Duffey of Boston ran the fastest century ever accredited to an amateur sprinter up to that time—9.6 seconds. He set the record in a race at the Berkeley Oval in New York, but several years later it was expunged from the book. A charge that before this great performance Duffey had professionalized himself was upheld, so in 1906, four years later, the mark was erased officially.

In a recent telephone conversation from his home in Boston, Duffey told this reporter that his offense was signing a contract to write for a physical culture magazine. "This had a lot to do with my disqualification," he said, mentioning also that at the time he was feuding with the brass of amateur athletics.

Did he think John Landy of Australia would run a four minute mile?

"He'll never do it," Duffey replied. The very next day (last Saturday) Landy failed by 4.2 seconds.

"It may be more likely that somebody will run the century in nine seconds," Duffey said, and added significantly, "When I ran 9.6 it was after a false start. At the end of 60 yards I was third."

Hagerty's plan calls for a comprehensive history of Georgetown track, with the compilation to be supervised by Frank Sevigne, now winning prestige as Hoyas' coach. That history could be salted with anecdotes, what with such colorful figures as Wefers and Duffey: Al Blozis, the great shotputter and discus thrower; Bob LeGendre, an Olympic star; Jim Connolly, champion miler; Hugh Short, a fast man in the 600, and Tony Plansky, a national decathlon champion (1924) and star football player.

Blozis never was defeated in the shotput in intercollegiate competition. In his first 19 meets with the Hoyas, he hung up meet records, sometimes breaking his own. In his first two years he competed in 28 meets and set 25 records. He was the world's best until Jim Fuchs of Yale came along to break most of his marks. Blozis, later a standout tackle with the New York Giants, died in action in France in 1945.

LeGendre was a star in the 1924 Olympics after failing to make the United States team in his specialty, the running broad jump. He was carried along for the pentathlon, an event he'd won three straight years, in the Penn Relays. In his first effort in the Paris games, LeGendre shattered the world broad jump record with a leap of 25 feet 6 inches.

Connolly won the IC-4A mile championship in 1923 in 4:17.8, but was a much better performer after he finished school, particularly in races against the great Joie Ray and Paavo Nurmi. For many years Connolly held the world record for seven-eighths of a mile, a distance seldom clocked. Runners capable of beating it let it stand. They liked the Boston Irishman who was always ready to give his best under any circumstances.

On one occasion, to help out some friends promoting a whippet meet at Griffith Stadium, Jimmy ran against a dog. The little pooch conceded him 50 yards in a 100-yard race and won by a leap.

Dorsey Griffith, now director of the Star Games, was a teammate of Connolly's and one of the East's good sprinters. As the leadoff man on Hoya relay teams, only once in three seasons was he beaten to the first turn.

Short, a quarter-miler on the 1943 teams, was called on to run the 600 one night in a Madison Square Garden meet. "But I've never run 600 yards," he complained to Coach Hap Hardell:

"You're ready," Hap insisted, "now get out there and run."

and orderly dovetailing of the two stack areas of the Library, namely the attic and the regular shelves that occupy the corner section of the building shown in the picture. This will mean quicker service to the patron at the desk downstairs waiting for his book or his unbound periodical; and for bibliographers like Father Parsons and antiquarians like Father Repetti it will mean that they can pick out their subject, or perhaps their century, and browse in it instead of (as at present) finding the work of a 16th century theologian rubbing shoulders with an item by a 19th century botanist, or a book on variable stars wedged in between a Greek grammar and an old cook book.

Finally, if we may end on a regretful note, there is something that will be lost under the new arrangement. Things will be so fixed that when you want to locate something, you go to the logical place and find it. That is good, and that is what we want. What will be lost, however, will be that intangible charm that an old, disorderly attic has— at least for some people. No more will the bibliographer’s nostrils quiver to the pleasant aroma of book rot; no more will his pulse quicken at the sight of that sunlit, jumbled corner where (who knows?) there may be lurking a copy of Poe’s Tamerlane, or some manuscript that will establish beyond cavil the identity of Shakespeare’s Mr. W. H. The gay motes will no longer people the sunbeams because Johns-Manville now has them under control. But let the sentimentalist repine. If we can get the issue of the American Mercury that Joe Student is waiting for downstairs, he may think well enough of the Library’s service to give us, in later years, a copy of Tamerlane—or even a new building—(without an attic).

Short tied John Borican’s world record for the distance.

When Johnny Holden of Hyattsville helped Georgetown’s 2-mile relay team to a world record of 7:41.6 in 1925, it was old hat with him, Holden, a transfer student, legged a fast half mile for Penn when, in 1922, it smashed the world mark then held by an Oxford-Cambridge quartet.

Sevigne’s burning ambition is to develop track on the Hilltop to the point where the Hoyas will win an IC-4A team championship, something which has eluded them in spite of many brilliant individuals.

It almost happened in 1925 during the coaching regime of the illustrious John O’Reilly. Georgetown needed only a third place in the mile relay to out-point Holy Cross. The baton was knocked from the hand of a Hoya and the Blue and Gray finished fifth.

For a bizarre touch, Hagerty’s chronicler, yet to be selected, might make a paragraph of Bob Eller's hurdles victory over Jim Thorpe, scored at 3 a.m. over picket fences on Massachusetts avenue.

A Review By REV. GERARD F. YATES, S.J.
Dean of the Graduate School

This review is being written on the morrow of Stalin's funeral, when Congressmen and columnists are still speculating whether Malenkov's accession will mean peace or war. A guide to finding the answer is contained in this book by Dr. Possony, Professor of International Politics in the Graduate School. I say "a guide to finding the answer" because the terms themselves, peace and war, have to be sharply defined according to their communist or western meaning before the question itself, or any answer to it, makes any sense. Such a definition can only be given after a searching examination of communist operational methods. As Possony demonstrates, conflict—partial or total, civil or international—is not regarded by the communists as a failure or a tragedy of policy, but as the necessary means for the advancement of their aims and the achievement of their final objective, a communist-dominated world. Clausewitz taught that "war is the continuation of politics by other means." The communists accept this dictum, and they have amplified it so that, to them, "peace" is the continuation of war by other means—not, as we would have it, a status of political equilibrium, desirable in itself, in which conflicts of interest can be settled without recourse to violence. To the communist, the cessation of organized military conflict is only a breathing spell for regrouping and building up more power. Meanwhile, aggressive action does not cease—it is continued by psychological means, by infiltration, sabotage both physical and moral, and all the submilitary and paramilitary methods of which the communists have so often demonstrated their mastery. As Lenin said, commenting on the text of Clausewitz, already cited: "War is part of a whole. The whole is politics."

Possony's thesis is, in effect, that Churchill was wrong when he said that Soviet policy was a riddle wrapped in an enigma inside a mystery. The doctrine of revolutionary conquest is spelled out in classic communist literature and demonstrated, first in Russia itself, then with increasing skill in Europe and Asia since 1939. The author brings to his task an admirable knowledge of sources. His recently acquired mastery of Russian; makes it possible for him to penetrate the linguistic iron curtain. He has already proved his expert knowledge of military strategy and international affairs in earlier books; here he presents a brilliant political and social analysis of the most important, most deadly force which our generation has yet faced.

A Century of Conflict has three main parts—first, an analysis of the communist doctrine of violence which is, in the author's words, "the focus of bolshevik operational thinking"; next a discussion of communist politics—military strategy and tactics in Europe and Asia since 1939; finally a synthesis of all that went before entitled "Soviet Conflict Management." American policy failures are discussed, particularly with reference to China. But this is not a shrill-voiced book; there is no word-stringing—there is solid, scholarly argument.

The author ends on a note of reasonable optimism for the future. War is not inevitable.

"The chances to avoid this sort of war are the greater, the lesser the relative military power of the Soviet Union; the more we succeed in undermining the domestic strength and controls of the soviets; the more hostile the Russian and satellite peoples become toward their rulers and the more they become convinced that the western nations are their friends and allies... The objective of our strategy should be to make all-out war an extreme risk for the soviets and to work toward a gradual modification, contraction, and replacement of soviet rule."

His final word is a great Christian word, charged with inspiration: "Hope is a bad counselor, but lack of courage and faith is the greatest plight of modern politics. Civilization and freedom cannot survive in fear. God did not create man after the image of a squirming worm. He created him as a Man."
In my opinion, the analysis of doctrine suffers from its disregard of communist metaphysics. After all, our enemy thinks and acts and assigns values, consciously or otherwise, in the light of his first principles. Conflict, revolution, the dream of a classless society are not self-explanatory goals; there must be something to make the communist able to endure the struggle. There are doubtless thousands of disillusioned communists, but there is no evidence that the movement is failing to make voluntary converts. The author offers nothing to explain its attraction.

It should be mentioned that the book is somewhat marred by printer's errors. Four striking charts in color form the endpapers.

In spite of these defects, I regard the book as the most important contribution to the literature of communist analysis in the past decade at least. I hope that it will be widely read and thoughtfully pondered by all our foreign policy makers and military staffs. I am immensely proud that it bears Georgetown's name on its title-page, and I commend it earnestly to all Georgetown alumni.

GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY ALUMNI MAGAZINE
ATHLETICS

By CHARLIE STEELE '52

BASKETBALL, track and baseball have all been in the spotlight since the last edition of the Alumni Magazine, so for the sake of clarity let's look at them one by one.

BASKETBALL: An invitation to the National Invitation Tournament at Madison Sq. Garden capped the most successful hoop season in a decade. Despite last minute losses to Penn State, Virginia and George Washington, the men of Coach Buddy Jeanette did so well against the better teams on their schedule that they were invited to the most exclusive post season tournament of them all. During the regular season the Hoyas beat Randolph-Macon, Loyola of Baltimore, Hampden-Sydney, Seattle, Rhode Island State, Maryland (twice), Le Moyne, Temple, Navy, St. Josephs, Fordham and George Washington. Seattle, Navy and Fordham were invitees to the NCAA tournament, while Maryland took second place in the Southern Conference, so as you see the Hoyas beat the big ones.

Bill Bolger became the first Georgetown player in history to score 1,000 points in three seasons. The Bolge had his best nights against the tough teams, scoring 24 against La Salle, 23 against Fordham and 29 against Seattle, all tournament teams. In so doing, Bill outscored Tom Gola, Norm Grekin, Johnny O'Brien and Ed Conlin, all All-Americans this season. Lou Gigante, Hugh Beins, Denny Murphy, Joe Carroll, Jake Hekker, Bob Stuhr and Bill Wolfer all played stand out ball during the entire season.

Mass graduation will find only Gigante and Carroll back next year from among this year's regulars. They will be joined from this year's varsity by Tom Doyle, Jack Vail and Al Bontempo. Freshmen who will probably make the grade are Warren Buehler, Bill Cowley, (two prolific scorers), Don Furth, Tom Heyman, Joe Bolger (Bill's brother) and Jack Walsh.

As this is written the N.I.T. has not yet begun, and while Georgetown is not given much chance of winning it, the players and students aren't going along with the experts.

TRACK: Next issue there will be a complete track run down. Right now suffice it to say that with Charlie Capozzoli, Joe LaPierre and Carl Joyce set to go, it looks like a great outdoor season in store. Coach Sevigne also has a fine freshmen group ready to burn up the cinders. Read the next issue for the complete track results, as well as the final records of Cappy, Joe and Carl, three track greats.

BASEBALL: The opening game this year will again find Joe Judge in the dugout masterminding the Hoya baseball forces. The team itself looms as a big question mark. The pitching staff and infield will be strong. The outfield will be inexperienced, and the catching uncertain.

Bob Waldele, Bob Stuhr and Bill Nolan were all fine pitchers last year, and, along with Jack Vail, should give Coach Judge one of the best pitching staffs he's ever had. Bill Wolfer, star third baseman for the past two seasons, is back again, and he'll anchor a top flight infield which will find Joe Carroll at short, Dick Ratterman at second and Jack Vail at first. Vail will also pitch, but when not on the mound he'll probably be back at first base, where he spent all last spring. George Gerardi, also a regular last year, will be in centerfield, but left field, right field and catcher don't look too strong as of now. All in all the team should do well, spearheaded by its pitching and an air tight infield. If Coach Judge can find a couple of hitting outfielders, the Hoyas could have a great year. Speaking of baseball, last year's two stars, Bob Walls and Frank Mattingly, are both in the service. Left fielder and clean up hitter Mattingly is a jet pilot, while Walls, All-Eastern second baseman, who stole 36 bases in 38 tries over two years, is in the Marines.

TENNIS: Herb Von Urrff, who last year as a freshman lost only once while playing on the varsity, should again be among the country's best. A strong supporting cast is also on hand, and it looks like Coach Al Ritzenberger will have a fine team in his first year at the Hilltop.

SPORTS SHORTS: Mike Vitale, Capt. of last year's basketball team, scored 17 points against the Georgetown Freshmen while playing for the Bainbridge Naval Center team. Tony Durmowicz of last year's club, who played for Wright Patterson Air Base this season, played against "Bevo" Francis, the nation's scoring sensation. Tony says he held Bevo to 54 points.
