Editor's Brief.

Students, faculty, administration and alumni all taken together make up Georgetown. The Alumni Magazine is an instrument designed to let one hand know what the other hand is up to. We hope to keep the Alumni portion of Georgetown informed as to what is happening at their university. Just as importantly we hope to let the Alumni know what is happening to their members. Material which can be incorporated in the Class Notes section is particularly appreciated. Also it is hoped that some of our readers will find time to write us of happenings in the Georgetown past. We feel that it is most appropriate that a story of a new surgical technique for the future should appear next to a recollection of what happened on an October day half a century ago in the quadrangle. It is all Georgetown.

Hunting for New Hoyas

This month some 5000 men and women will enroll in the eight Georgetown divisions. The University's student population will be heterogeneous if the past year's pattern holds true. About 80% of the students will be Catholics; 20% will be married; 10% will be women; 8% will be foreign students; 26% will be veterans; 35% will work and finance their own education; 25% will attend night school; 6% will hold scholarships; 52% will come to Georgetown because of its academic reputation; 20% will be directed here because of alumni interest and 15% will come on advice of their parents.

The task of bringing these individuals to Georgetown and settling them into academic programs of their choice is the primary responsibility of the University's registrars and admissions officers who are photographically introduced on the following pages.

The underlying Georgetown admissions policy makes heavy demands on the admitting officers. The Georgetown goal is to select its new students carefully, so that only a small number are later dropped for academic deficiencies. One admissions officer stated, "The weeding out process, where a large number are taken in, but a large number fail, is economically unsound and unfair to the students."

The difficulty of selecting students who will make good is greatest in the undergraduate schools. A student applying to a professional or graduate school has his educational aims well in mind, and in addition presents a four year college record which allows for specific evaluation of his academic ability.

On the other hand, the would-be undergraduate freshman applies directly from secondary school. Often his educational background is difficult to evaluate and in addition he himself may have only a vague knowledge of his educational aims and aptitude.

Rev. Joseph M. Moffitt, S.J., is Director of Undergraduate Admissions at Georgetown. He is specifically responsible for admissions to the College of Arts and Sciences but also coordinates the work of admissions officers in Foreign Service and Nursing.

Rev. Joseph M. Moffitt, S.J.

Christ, Our Lord, died on the cross to save the world. He died to restore the harmony between God and man, man and man, man and himself, man and lower nature. The Roman Catholic Church exists to continue and extend the work of Christ till the end of time. The Society of Jesus is a religious order dedicated to help in this work of Christ and His Church. Georgetown University is a part of the apostolic mission of the Jesuits. Unless we see Georgetown as fitting into this apostolic and supernatural picture, we do not see it as it is. In fact, we do not see it at all.

Georgetown is a human instrument, working with human material. The final result of Georgetown's efforts is limited by the material on which it works. We seek always, therefore, for young men and women with brains enough and backbone enough to receive our training and to develop into Christian men and women of character and intelligence, who will see themselves as part of the mission of Christ and the Church to redeem the world.—REV. JOSEPH M. MOFFITT, S.J.

Father Moffitt describes the admissions job as a dual one. "Our first duty is to stimulate interest in Georgetown among prospective students. The second is to select from among the applicants those whose capacity for achievement at Georgetown and later in the community seems to be the greatest."

Father Moffitt believes that word-of-mouth advertising is the best method for recruiting new Georgetown students. "The reputation of a university is best spread by its satisfied customers, specifically students and alumni," he declares. A number of "talking points" have in the past convinced students that they should come to Georgetown. By far the most important of these is the University's academic reputation. Last year 2620 of Georgetown's 5200 students stated that this was why they enrolled. Various departments will appeal to different groups, but Father Moffitt believes that the two courses creating the most interest are the pre-medical department of the College and the School of Foreign Service.

A variety of secondary reasons often convince prospective students and their parents of Georgetown's advantages. Georgetown is old, and tradition adds prestige to an educational institution. Georgetown is close to the eastern metropolitan areas and therefore attracts many from these population centers. Parents are impressed by University status, the great variety of educational programs being conducted in the one organization. The advantages of the Washington location are many in terms of special lecturers, research facilities, intimate contact with national affairs, social and recreational facilities. In addition Washington is one of the world's most beautiful and cosmopolitan cities.

As the applications arrive at Georgetown the process of screening begins. "We keep two essential points in mind," comments Father Moffitt. "First we maintain high academic standards at Georgetown, and we select students who have a good chance of measuring up to these standards. Secondly, the primary aim of Georgetown is to train and graduate men and women who will eventually be professional, moral and civic leaders in the community. The quip that the purpose of a University is to produce alumni is not far from wrong. We try to select students who will make outstanding citizens."

Secondary school marks are obviously of great importance in evaluating a student's academic potential. Such factors, however, as size and quality of the secondary school are considered. Intelligence tests and recommendations as to capacity by school instructors are also of influence. Both the College and Foreign Service School now require the College Entrance Board Examinations.

STUDENTS MAKE THE SCHOOL

Evaluating a candidate's capacity for leadership and responsibility is a far more difficult matter than judging his academic background. Father Moffitt believes that one of the most encouraging developments in the admissions program is the establishment of Alumni Admissions Committees throughout the country for this purpose. These boards, 79 in number, consisting of from three to twenty members, interview Georgetown applicants in their areas. "The advantage of this system," says Father Moffitt, "is that alumni know what is required at Georgetown and in general what type of man we train here. The alumni boards can evaluate the intangibles which are impossible to judge from records and recommendations."

The influence of the alumni is very great in the admissions program. "We are especially grateful," declares Father Moffitt, "to those alumni who have spent so much of their time and money visiting schools to interview students and their parents. Many alumni are excellent salesmen for the school. Instead of asking Georgetown to take undesirable students as a favor to them, these men scout around for exceptional students of character and ability. They try to persuade them to come to Georgetown. These alumni realize that Georgetown's student body needs new fresh blood every year if she is to reach her goal."

Like other institutions, the caliber of the student body is important to the University's reputation and Georgetown is anxious to encourage and aid men and women of great promise. Last year 206 of the College of Arts and Sciences' 1300 students held scholarships. Again Father Moffitt has praise for alumni groups active in this field. "In several cities, including Chicago, Pittsburgh and Washington, alumni groups conduct yearly campaigns to provide area students with Georgetown scholarships."

"Greater Georgetown actually consists of students, faculty, staff and alumni," says Father Moffitt. "Good students mean higher academic standards, greater academic reputation and therefore greater prestige for the Georgetown degree. It is to the advantage of every member of the Greater Georgetown community to make an effort to ensure that the University will continue to enroll students of a high caliber."—BIL GILBERT, '51.

Mrs. Grace Anthony—Graduate

Mrs. Renee McGee, Institute of Languages.

In addition to the above admissions officers, Miss Marie L. Stoll, Registrar of the Law School, has served Georgetown since 1934.

Georgetown enrollment figures taken at decade intervals for the past century show that the University is now some 28 times as large as it was in 1855.

ATHLETICS

The Georgetown intercollegiate athletic program for 1955-56 will commence in October with competition in soccer and cross country. Schedules for these two sports appear in another section of this issue of the Alumni Magazine. Though both sports are popular at Georgetown, the fall athletic program which draws the largest number of students participants is our Inter-Class Football League.

The question of football has been debated widely by those with an interest in Georgetown affairs, but I sometimes feel that the real merits of the inter-class program which replaced intercollegiate football are overlooked. In terms of exercise, contact and competition, football is football, whether played in a huge stadium or on a small field on your own campus. To my mind, however, the unique value of the current Georgetown program is that it gives a hundred or more Georgetown students an opportunity to continue playing a good hard brand of football during their four college years.

In an effort to present a clear picture of the type of football played at Georgetown I asked one of our law students, Bill Curtin, to express his ideas on the subject. Bill is perhaps one of the best qualified men to comment on the inter-class football program. He was an outstanding high school football player in Auburn, N.Y. He was a member of our last freshman inter-collegiate team. He has played in the inter-class program for three years and last year was an assistant coach of the Freshman team and will continue to coach this year. Bill's views are expressed as follows.

"Inter-class football is beginning its fifth year at Georgetown. Since the intercollegiate variety of the sport was dropped not a fall has gone by without pigskins spiralling through the Upper Field zone.

"It's not the same.' No, it isn't nor can it be. But not all the differences are harmful ones. Let's be frank: there is a lot to say in favor of inter-collegiate football, the unquestioned interest and spirit it engenders in both alumni and students being one of its strongest arguments. At the same time, very little healthy spirit seems to result from a losing team. And the plain fact is that the small colleges and the schools maintaining unwavering academic standards are the ones who lose.

"After four years I think the Georgetown program could be called fairly vigorous. A man like George Murtaugh, who heads the program, is hard to come by in terms of football savvy and quiet inspiration examples for young men. Jack Hagerly, Steve Barabas, another former Hoya star, and Pop Sweetman from Fordham round out the head coaching staff.

"As might be expected, the heaviest turnout for positions on the team annually come from Freshmen. Some 50 or 60 show up during the first week of practice and during the regular season the Frosh have about three teams going. The other classes turn out about two teams of regulars. But victory isn't in numbers, for last year's Frosh were tied by the Juniors for the league championship. As assistant coach of the men of '58 I know that those boys played hard and rough, and the potential for high caliber play was there. To cite a few examples, our club had three top-notch half-backs: two regulars from Washington's always tough Gonzaga High School and another from the undefeated eleven that copped the Central New York championship. We had a fine offensive tackle from this last-mentioned club and he was paired with a 6'4", 240 pound giant from Cleveland. Our guards were fine players, three of whom had been offered athletic scholarships to other schools. One of these had been a real mainstay the year before with the South Carolina Gamecocks. Our regular center had a pile of 'offers'. Not a bad squad and remember these boys only tied for the league championship.

"What is the spectator-student reaction? Well there is little of the old rah-rah, though we do have our modest rallies, car caravans, class cheers, etc. There is of course no identification of team prowess with pride in the school. There is, however, a more personal and intimate spirit. There is no hesitancy on the part of the ordinary student to approach the football player with congratulations or condolences. They are not a class apart; the good ball player may be admired but he is not idolized. This is as it should be in a program which is specifically designed for the participant, the boy who simply wants to play football and is not too concerned with glory."

I believe that Bill Curtin has clearly described some of the merits and disadvantages of the Inter-class football program. Certainly any Georgetown man can be proud of our current football spirit and we are all looking forward to another good season. JACK HAGERTY, '26.

A Georgetown Profile

From the Rough and Tumble to the Scientific

A widely syndicated Washington columnist wrote, "Fred Lawton knows more about the United States government than any other man in the country." Washington columnists by inclination and necessity are given to categorical statements. However, those with knowledge of big government would be inclined to agree that the Lawton statement was one of the columnist's more acute observations.

Frederick J. Lawton, a native Washingtonian who holds two degrees from Georgetown University, has served thirty-five years as a federal administrator and executive. His assignments have been numerous, ranging in nature from a job as a Presidential trouble shooter in foreign aid affairs to a consultant on the reorganization of the executive branch of the government. Two big jobs have given him a good claim to at least a share of the title Mr. Government. Lawton was Director of the Budget from 1950 to 1953, and since April, 1953, has served as the Democratic member of the Civil Service Commission. As Budget Director he scrutinized how and why the Federal government spends its billions, and as one of a triumvirate of Civil Service Commissioners he takes an equally careful look at how and why the 2,000,000 Civil Service employees are hired, fired, promoted, trained and retained.

When Lawton received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Georgetown's College of Arts and Sciences in 1920 he had no carefully mapped out career plan aimed at landing him in the highest echelons of the federal service. His first aim was to become a diplomat. In 1921 he was serious enough about this career to go back to Georgetown's new School of Foreign Service to take night courses which he thought might help him realize his diplomatic ambitions. Later his personal affairs made it apparent that he could not accept an overseas assignment and he turned his attention to other branches of the government.

Lawton went to work for the Treasury Department in 1921. He enjoyed the financial work, but "I felt I wasn't really improving myself, and with the idea that it might lead to more interesting opportunities I enrolled as a night student at the Georgetown Law School," recalls Lawton. He received his LL.B. degree in 1934. Lawton's rapid rise started shortly thereafter. He was assigned to the Bureau of the Budget in 1935. In 1937 he was appointed for two years as a member of the Public Works National Resources Planning Board. He was made Assistant Director of the Budget Bureau in 1949, Director in 1950, and was appointed Civil Service Commissioner by President Eisenhower in 1953.

Lawton has also taken on several advisory and trouble shooting assignments. In April, 1948, he was called in by President Truman to serve as a Presidential Administrative Assistant, acting as a liaison man smoothing over the critical interdepartmental difficulties which arose as the Truman administration was organizing the Marshall Plan program. Lawton also served as a fiscal, budgeting and accounting adviser to the first Hoover Commission on Executive reorganization.

Lawton and the two Republican Civil Service Commissioners act both in executive and judicial fashion in determining the broad federal personnel policies. In the Commission's F and 8th Street offices, just a good legal brief's throw from the Georgetown Law School where he was a student a quarter of a century ago, Lawton muses on the differences between present personnel policies and those which were in effect when he was entering government service.

"Unquestionably, government is a more attractive career now than it was then," he comments. "In those days it was a rough and tumble sort of thing. If you caught the eye of a superior and had the right kind of a background you got the promotion. It worked out well in some cases, but often good men were passed over in this hit and miss system. Today federal personnel policies have been overhauled and are founded on a much more scientific basis. We are making a great effort, with college level entrance examinations, better pay and more careful placing, to make the federal service an attractive career. Promotions are now pretty much regularized and if a man has the training and proven ability he will go up as fast or faster in the government service as he will with private industry. There is a good deal of talk about political insecurity in the government, but actually a change of political administration only affects a few hundred of the top policy-making jobs. Also there are certain distinct advantages for the government employee. One of the chief is the idea inherent in the term "public servant". For many there is a good deal of satisfaction in serving their government to the best of their ability."

Georgetown—Now and Then

A tragic accident in Battle Creek, Mich. took the life of one of Georgetown's most courageous alumni, John H. Callahan, 31, '45. Callahan and two companions were killed when their car was struck by a passenger train in Battle Creek on June 17.

Callahan was afflicted with cerebral palsy at birth and his struggle to win over the handicap was one which has stood as an inspiration to other victims of the disease. He was unable to walk until he was 10 and gaining the use of his muscles was a slow process. However Callahan, a fine student, persisted. He entered Georgetown in 1942, received his A.B. three years later, and completed his LL.B. in 1947. As a student he taught himself a new pattern of speech and learned to write on an electric typewriter with one hand. Callahan began practicing law in Battle Creek in 1949.

A Battle Creek newspaper commenting on the accident said, "We lost more than a man when we lost John; we lost a great testament to courage."

"Education and Experience of Airlines and Shipping Management Executives," a report compiled by a research team of advanced School of Foreign Service students, has been released by Admiral Richard R. McNulty, Director, Shipping Research at the Foreign Service School. The research project, now part of SFS curriculum for transportation majors, is designed to give students experience in dealing with transportation problems and at the same time provide useful source material for various American firms in the field.

Some 300 leading transportation executives were polled by the Georgetown students. In general the transportation leaders seemed to feel that the ideal training for a future executive in their field would be some liberal arts courses correlated with intensive specialized, technical training.

Elmer (Hap) Hardell has been appointed head track coach at Georgetown, succeeding Frank Sevigne who left this summer to head the track program at the University of Nebraska. This marks Hardell's second tour of duty as Georgetown track coach. He held the post from 1939-49. Hardell, a high school instructor in the District of Columbia, was an outstanding quarter miler at Michigan. He has coached strong track and football teams at Washington's McKinley Tech. At Georgetown, Hardell brought along the Hoya's immortal Al Blozis; Hugh Short, middle distance star of the early 40's; and put together a world's record relay team.

Lawyers Lunch and Distinguished Alumni

Georgetown Law Alumni and University officials met on August 25 at a luncheon in the Hotel Warwick in Philadelphia. The Georgetown luncheon was held in connection with the 1955 Convention of the American Bar Association. Above at the Georgetown luncheon (L-R): Rev. Francis E. Lucey, S.J., Regent of the Law Center; Judge Joseph P. Lieb, '24; Joseph B. Brennan, '25, President of the Georgetown Alumni Association; Very Rev. Edward B. Bunn, S.J., President of Georgetown; Judge Charles Fahy, '14 and Dr. James S. Ruby, '27, Executive Secretary of the Georgetown Alumni Association.

Discussion at the luncheon centered on the plans for the Dean Fegan Memorial Fund. Law Alumni of Georgetown hope to raise $200,000 to memorialize the name of the late Dean Hugh J. Fegan, who died on December 19, 1954.

J. Caleb Boggs, '37, Governor of Delaware, is serving as National Chairman of the Dean Fegan Memorial Drive. At the luncheon, Governor Boggs presented Father Bunn with a check for $7,399.82, the initial installment of the planned fund.

The Dean Fegan Drive will end on December 19, 1955, the first anniversary of Dr. Fegan's death. Regional chairmen of the Drive will meet at Georgetown on September 24 to discuss final campaign plans. The eleven regional Chairmen appointed by Governor Boggs represent each of the Federal Judicial Circuits in the United States.

They Went to Georgetown, a feature which has been included in the past several issues of the Alumni Magazine, is continued below. The list of distinguished Georgetown men has been compiled by Dr. James S. Ruby, Executive Secretary of the Alumni Association.
