To understand the Society of Jesus, its spirit and works during the past four centuries, one must understand something of the Founder of the Jesuit Order. And to understand the Founder, one must consider the times and circumstances in which he lived. For he was a product of his own age, though, like all who achieve immortality, he transcended the trivial superficialities of his day, to attain to the essential and the enduring.

Ignatius of Loyola was born about the time of the discovery of America. Loss of the records of the town of Azpeitia, in the province of Guipuzcoa, precludes a certain fixing of the year, beyond the conjectured limits of 1491 to 1495. The most probable date seems to be 1493. From his Basque ancestry he inherited the sturdy independence still characteristic of the Pyrenean mountaineers; from his family, of ancient noble lineage, he was imbued with the fierce pride of caste befitting a scion of the House of Loyola y Onaz.

If he was no worse, certainly he was no better than the general run of cavalier-courtiers of his day—sensuous, vain, jealous of personal honor, ambitious for earthly glory. Destined by his family, as a younger son, for the clerical state, and tonsured at an early age, young Don Inigo's ideas were set in another direction. Hence, after receiving little more than the rudiments of education, he entered the service of the Court, first as a page, later as a soldier. Of his writing ability we have no evidence in these early days—indeed, even his later writings, after his attempts in middle life to recoup his education, are scarcely models of classical purity, either in Spanish or in Latin. His reading, by his own confession, was confined to romances and tales of chivalry.

Ignatius was a soldier; and from this fact has arisen the fictitious "regimentation" of the Society he founded in 1534. A study of the rather loose soldierly discipline of the times would of itself suffice to confound this nonsensical view. But more telling is Ignatius' own view. He would have preferred to have in his Society no set Rules or Constitutions, preferring to rely, for the government of the Order, on "the Divine wisdom and goodness of God, our Creator and Lord"; and, on the part of the members on "the interior law of charity and love which the Holy Spirit is wont to imprint in the hearts of men". It is significant that one of his greatest sons in the Society, Francis Xavier, embarked on his missionary journeys to the East long before the Constitutions of the Society of Jesus were formulated.

It is truer to say that from his experiences as soldier and cavalier Ignatius learned deeply the lessons of loyalty and fidelity. It was loyalty to his King which brought him to the battlefield of Pamplona, to defend the province of Navarre from seizure by the French. And there the cannonball struck, which left his body crippled, but freed his spirit for soaring flight to the heights of sanctity.

The victory was not immediate, nor the struggle easy. But God laid gentle, insistent siege to his soul, working through his natural qualities of generosity, magnanimity, and knightly ambition. His eyes opened by grace to the true glory, Ignatius capitulated, and offered his sword to God through the hands of his beloved Mother Mary. Henceforth he would serve no King but Christ Our Lord, would seek the favor of no Lady but the Queen of Heaven. The fiery, impetuous spirit, the devoted sense of loyalty, were not crushed by grace—they were purified, elevated, dedicated to a higher purpose than the tawdry rewards of earthly ambition.

Not one to do things by halves, Ignatius made his renunciation complete—abdicating all his noble rights and titles, distributing his rich raiment to an astonished beggar, donning the coarse garb of a pilgrim, to live days and nights of prayer and penance in a crude hillside cave.

Of his experiences at Manresa, of the heavenly visitations with which he was favored throughout his later life, Ignatius could ever speak only in the groping, inadequate words of the true mystic.

It was not all sweetness and light. The Knight of God had to learn by bitter experience that the struggle between good and evil is warfare, unending, implacable, with no possibility of “peaceful coexistence”. He was tried to the depths of his soul by that indescribable experience known as “the dark night of the soul”—that sense of abandonment, approaching suicidal despair, in which faith, and love, and trust are tried as gold in the fire. From the lights and shadows through which he passed, Ignatius learned the secrets of “discernment of spirits”—that profound spiritual psychology which separates the true and salutary promptings of grace in the human soul from the insidious wiles of the enemy of mankind, posing under the guise of an angel of light.

By the study of his own soul—his own wayward and fruitless past, his elevation to the heights and descent to the depths of spiritual experience, he learned, under the guidance of God Himself, those lessons he later incorporated into the “Spiritual Exercises.”

The lesson of the “Exercises”—and, by consequence, the spirit of the Society of Jesus, is at once simple and profound. It is the spirit of complete, unselfish, dedicated love. From the opening “Principle and Foundation”—which lays the rational basis of love in God’s right by creation—to the final self-surrender of the “Take and receive, O Lord”, the whole motivation of the exercises is love of God, knightly loyalty to Christ.

Even the highest human love for God is subject to error, to self-illusionment, unless guided by reason and prudence; not, to be sure, by that narrow human prudence which fears “lest having Him, I must have naught beside”; but by the Divine prudence taught by Our Lord Himself—“If you love Me, keep My commandments.”

The guiding norm of human love and loyalty—this is Ignatian obedience. Not a subservient, external conformity out of fear, but a loving, filial submission to the direction and guidance of God-appointed Superiors, lest self-will or the deceits of the enemy divert well-meant but misguided strivings unto self-destruction.

The signature of Ignatius of Loyola, preserved in the Georgetown archives, is the only such signature known to exist in the United States. It was presented to the University in 1944 as part of the Talbot collection.
Obedience, above all, to God and Christ, in the Church of His founding. For to Her, since the Mystery of Pentecost, has been granted the guidance of souls; in Her and through Her the Holy Spirit works to bring to men the fruits of the Redemption.

Ignatius saw in the evils of his own day the fruits of self-assertion, against the rights of God. He saw the moral degradation in the human administration of Christ's Church. Though he deplored the human failings, and sent his sons to the Council of Reformation at Trent, yet as long as she existed—till the end of time—her duly authorized rulers were to be obeyed in their legitimate commands. Even, so he said, were the Society of Jesus itself to be suppressed by the Holy See, it would take him no more than ten minutes to be reconciled. A lesson his sons had to put to the test two centuries later!

All about him, in the explosive period of the Renaissance, he saw the devastating effects of brilliant disorder: exaggerated views of human excellence, which he counteracted by recalling man's created, dependent status; the degeneracy of man's efforts to the service of self, to which he opposed the ideal of uncompromising service of God our Lord. Above all he saw, and was most deeply hurt by, the self-will and disloyalty which raised the spirit of revolt against the See of Peter, rending the unity of Christendom in the specious name of "reformation." Against this spirit Ignatius raised the standard of obedience and loyalty to Christ in His only Vicar on earth, the Sovereign Pontiff.

After the providential failure of his own ill-considered and rashly zealous plan to "convert the Saracens", Ignatius and his little band of devoted followers betook themselves to Rome, to offer their services completely and unconditionally to the Holy See. In all her works ever since, the Society of Jesus still kneels with Ignatius and his first companions obediently at the feet of the Sovereign Pontiff. To the solemn vows of religion her sons add a special vow of obedience to the Holy Father, instantly responsive to his slightest wish, his most exacting command. Thus animated by the vision of her Founder, the Society of Jesus strives manfully to walk the path Ignatius of Loyola trod—the way of unstinting love of God above all things, and of unwavering, knightly loyalty to Christ.—Rev. S. X. Winters, S.J.

Celebrate Ignatian Year On March 11

Three Georgetown men will head committees in charge of arrangements for participation of all Jesuit-trained students and alumni of the Mid-Atlantic area in a nationwide tribute to St. Ignatius Loyola, founder of the Jesuits. The affair will be held on March 11, 1956.

James A. Albana, C'36 will head the committee in the Norfolk, Va. area; John J. Schlick, C'47 will head the Washington group while F. B. Sitterding, C'12 will serve as Chairman in the Richmond, Va. area. The Georgetown University Alumni Association will coordinate arrangements in the area and committee chairmen were appointed by Dr. James S. Ruby, executive secretary of the organization.

The March 11 observance will consist of a Mass, followed by a breakfast at which a prominent speaker will discuss the educational and spiritual ideals of St. Ignatius and their relevance to modern society. The tribute is a feature of a world-wide Ignatian Year, celebrating the 400th anniversary of the death of St. Ignatius. Similar observances will be held in hundreds of cities throughout the United States on the same day.

It is estimated that there are 600,000 students or alumni of Jesuit colleges and universities in the United States. Educational institutions for laymen conducted by the Jesuits in this country include 28 colleges and universities and 41 preparatory or high schools in 22 states and the District of Columbia.

The Mass for the Washington gathering will be celebrated at 9 a.m. in McDonough Memorial Gymnasium, on the Georgetown University campus, with the breakfast to be held immediately following at the Hotel Sheraton Park.

The nationwide program has been arranged and is directed through the Jesuit Alumni Committee working through officers of its various institutional chapters throughout the nation.

A schedule of the Ignatian celebration throughout the country is now available at the Georgetown Alumni House. Queries as to the arrangement in any particular locality may be addressed to Dr. James S. Ruby.

All of the nation's 600,000 Jesuit trained students and alumni will receive during the next month a brochure describing the purpose of the Ignatian celebration and outlining regional arrangements for the March 11 affair.

Basketball is now in full swing at Georgetown and the indoor track season will commence this month. Georgetown competes on an intersectional basis against major opponents in these sports, and the school is now perhaps best known athletically by the activity of the track and basketball teams.

However, considered from the standpoint of the value of athletics to the entire college community, a number of other athletic teams and activities are equally important on the Georgetown campus. Currently the University sponsors eleven intercollegiate teams as well as one of the most extensive intramural programs of any college in the east.

Below are listed Georgetown's eleven intercollegiate teams, the cost of each and the number of participants based on the 1954-55 academic year.

Georgetown men may well be proud of the number of students who participate in the athletic program. In general only those universities with considerably greater enrollments and facilities support more comprehensive athletic programs than Georgetown. As a way of comparison: Yale supports 16 sports; Navy, 15; UCLA, 13; Maryland, 10; University of Kentucky, 9; Georgia Tech, 8; University of Connecticut, 8; University of Detroit, 7; and George Washington, 6. The eleven sports supported by Georgetown are more than any other Catholic college in the nation.

Many of the sports organized in the post-war period, notably sailing, soccer and swimming, have been a direct outgrowth of student enthusiasm. During the first few years of their existence they were entirely student projects. Now, with the interest and value of these sports clearly demonstrated, they have been incorporated into the regular athletic program of the University. Recently the Georgetown Athletic Council distributed "A Guide to Athletics at Georgetown," which outlines the responsibilities of each student athlete at Georgetown and what aid and support the teams and individuals may receive from the University. The Guide also provides for the organization of new sports at Georgetown, for it is assumed that the Georgetown program will continue to grow and expand. This Guide may be obtained by any interested alumnus, simply by writing me in care of the Georgetown Athletic Department.

In my opinion, this emphasis on a number of sports and opportunities for participation is of extreme value. There are at the moment, I am certain, more Georgetown athletes, that is students playing on intercollegiate teams or in regularly scheduled intramural contests, than ever before in the school's history. This is a healthy situation for athletics are serving their true purpose of giving physical exercise and stimulation and at the same time serving as a focal point for loyal and interested Georgetown men, students, and alumni, players and fans.—Jack Hagerty '26

Plan New Directory

Work has begun in earnest on a new Directory of all Georgetown University Alumni. The book is scheduled for publication during the Fall of 1956, and will contain information on some 44,000 individuals who have entered Georgetown since the arrival of the first student in 1791.

A Questionnaire has been mailed to each of the 23,000 Alumni for whom the Alumni Association has current addresses. Each recipient of a Questionnaire is asked to send accurate information of his complete name, his class, occupation, business address, home address, specialties, degrees from educational institutions other than Georgetown, together with information which may help us locate him should he change his address without notifying the Association. Those who answer the Questionnaire will be assured of correct listing in the volume. Those who do not will be carried according to the best information we have in our present files.

In addition to the 23,000 Alumni who constitute our mailing list, we have records of some 13,000 deceased former students, and approximately 8,000 carried as "Address Unknown". This last category is receiving intensive treatment at the present time as the staff of Alumni House searches phone books, Medical, Dental and Legal Directories, Fraternity rosters and every conceivable lead which may help us to reduce the unknown total. In addition, we are trying to trace the lost individuals by appealing to other University Alumni Offices whenever we find that a lost Alumnus has attended another institution. During the past year in which the search has been pushed, some 3,000 addresses have been added to our list. During the same period, we have had the cooperation of the University Archivist, Rev. William Repetti, S.J., who has compiled accurate data on several thousand men who attended Georgetown from its opening in 1791 until the year of the first published catalogue of students, 1850. The 1956 Directory is planned to be the only publication carrying this information. Directories in future years will list only Alumni of classes with living members.

When the data which we receive as a result of the Directory Questionnaire has been incorporated into our records, information on each individual alumnus will be punched into I.B.M. punch-cards, so arranged that cards may be sorted electronically into alphabetical, geographical and class order. When the punching has been completed and checked for accuracy, the cards will be used to produce the manuscript which will be photographically reduced and printed.

The book will contain three main sections. The first, arranged in alphabetical order will contain all pertinent information concerning every one of the 44,000 Alumni. The second section will list graduates and non-graduates by classes and departments, with symbols identifying those who are deceased and those whose addresses are not known. The third section will list Alumni by state and city, each name identified by class numerals and a numerical symbol showing occupation. This latter listing is most in demand in referring professional cases.

Our 1947 Directory contained 540 pages. Its predecessor volume in 1941 had 280. It appears that the 1956 Directory will require more than 800 pages.

A pre-publication price of $5.50 has been set for the book. Orders received after the volume goes to press will cost $6.50 per volume.

This book is being prepared as a result of very widespread demand among Georgetown alumni. The number of copies to be printed will be determined from the number of orders received with the questionnaires. To be assured of obtaining your copy, order now.—Dr. James S. Ruby ’27

Dr. Ruby is Executive Secretary of the Georgetown Alumni Association

Based on its position as one of the leaders among American institutions in raising the level of faculty salaries, Georgetown University was one of 126 liberal arts colleges to receive an increased share of the recent $500,000,000 educational grants made by the Ford Foundation. The Ford grants, called “the largest lump gifts in the history of philanthropy,” were distributed first to some 615 private four year liberal arts colleges the funds to be used for the increase of faculty salaries. A second, “bonus” grant was made to the 126 colleges which had demonstrated that they had previously made the biggest contributions in their own right toward raising faculty salaries. The basic grant to each of the colleges by the Ford Foundation approximately matched the faculty payroll for 1954-55, while the bonus portion was equivalent to approximately half this faculty payroll for the same year.

Georgetown’s total share of the grant was $648,700, this figure being based exclusively on the faculty salaries of the College of Arts and Sciences, as separate from the other undergraduate divisions of the University which were not deemed liberal arts schools under the terms of the gift.

Those schools receiving the additional bonus grant for “leading the way in their regions in improving the status and compensation of American college teachers,” were determined by an educational advisory committee which assisted the Foundation in forming its method of distributing the educational gifts. The advisory committee based its selection on returns from questionnaires which were sent to every regionally accredited privately supported college and university in the country.

Rev. Joseph F. Cohalan, University Treasurer, who presented Georgetown’s case to the advisory committee, explains that the questionnaires were based on the level of faculty benefits existing in 1947 as compared to those offered currently by the colleges. During this post-war period Georgetown, not only substantially increased faculty salaries, but also in January 1954, instituted a comprehensive retirement program for faculty and staff members.

Father Cohalan indicates that the money raised through Alumni Fund efforts and presented to the University was one of the contributing factors which enabled Georgetown to adopt its progressive policy of increased faculty benefits. Some $225,000 has been raised through the Alumni Annual Giving program, and this assistance was of considerable assistance to Georgetown in establishing the policies which enabled it to qualify as one of the 126 “bonus” schools.

Father Cohalan believes that the success of the Annual Giving program is one of the most encouraging factors in Georgetown’s financial future. “This substantial alumni assistance has aided us greatly in our continuing efforts to improve the economic status of our faculty. Even more important, we feel, is the assurance that the Annual Giving program will be a permanent source of support upon which we can rely in our annual budget planning. Since the growth of similar programs is a good criterion, it seems safe to assume that in the not too distant future the income from the Alumni Annual Giving Program will be the equivalent of the income from an endowment fund of seven or eight million dollars. An inspiring symbol of Alumni devotion to Alma Mater.”

Incomplete figures indicate that the 1955-56 Alumni Annual Giving campaign will exceed all past efforts of the Association. Donations totaling $115,000 have already been received and others are still to be recorded. The previous year’s total was $107,000. A complete survey of the Fund activity will be given in the March issue of the Alumni Magazine.
Graduate Manager of Athletics, Jack Hagerty has announced the following schedules for the track and swimming teams. The Georgetown swimming team, competing without a pool of its own, will continue to use the American University pool for practice and home meets. Operating under the same conditions last year the swimmers compiled a 9-1 record, best performance of any Georgetown team during the year.

The College Journal of 75 years ago offers fresh evidence for those who claim that things are not what they were and probably never have been. During the winter of 1885 the Georgetown students were suffering through a particularly brisk cold snap during which the thermometer dipped to 4° below zero. The editors of the Journal attempted to hearten their readers by reporting that things could be much worse. During the preceding fifty years below-zero temperatures had been recorded at Georgetown some twenty-five times, including sub-zero readings of 12° in 1835; 11° below in 1857; 4° in 1860; 7° in 1873; 11° in 1880 and 4° in 1881. The Washington Weather Bureau currently reports that the last below-zero recording in the District of Columbia was a piddling 2° below, two decades ago in January, 1935. So much for the decadence of modern weather.

The Journal of the same year also bolsters the position of those conservatives who claim that things don’t change very much (Boys will be boys division). Modern Georgetown parents might believe that, despite milder winters, there is a greater variety of deviltry open to the vacationing college man these days, what with sport cars, slippery superhighways, and airplane courtships. They should, however, consider the case of Captain James McSherry who, before the close of the Christmas holidays in 1885, had to inform Georgetown authorities that his 18 year old son, Roger, would not be able to return since he had been run over by a sleigh. The Journal adds, “The Accident is said to have been the result of a race between two sleighs along Market street in Frederick (Md.).”

Fortunately, Roger McSherry recovered and returned to join his college class of 1889. Jaguar or sleigh, it’s all the same though perhaps a bit warmer now.

Mario Rodriguez, who received a Master of Science in Foreign Service degree from Georgetown in 1935, has been named Chilean Ambassador to the United States it was recently announced. The newly appointed Ambassador has been serving as the Chief of the Political Department of the Chilean Foreign Office.
Travelers, Elections and Alumni

Georgetown, because of its location and academic traditions, often entertains distinguished visitors from abroad, inspecting American educational plants and methods. Among the most recent of these scholar-guests was The Venerable Vira Dhammawara, Leader of the Buddhist Order and spiritual advisor to ex-King Norodom Sihamouk of Cambodia. The Venerable, a participant in the Foreign Leader Program is shown here visiting with Rev. Frank L. Fadmir, Regent of the School of Foreign Service.

Georgetown men have recently fared well on the election front in a variety of dissimilar fields. Forty-one undergraduate students, twenty-one from the College and the balance from the School of Foreign Service, were selected for inclusion in the current edition of “Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.”

John Dingell, Jr., C’49 and Law ’52, a Democrat, scored a one sided victory as he succeeded his late father as United States Representative from Michigan’s 15th Congressional District. Unofficial returns of the December election gave the twenty-nine year old Dingell 19,624 votes to 6,106 for his Republican opponent.

Dr. Goetz Briefs, professor of Economics at Georgetown, was elected President of the Catholic Economic Association. The results of the mail-ballot election were announced in Montreal by Rev. Emile Bouvier, S.J., the Association’s retiring president. Father Bouvier is acting chairman of the Economics Department at Georgetown.

Joseph G. Connor, registrar of the College of Arts and Sciences, has been elected President of the Middle States Association of College Registrars and Officers of Admission.

Following is a continuation of Georgetown’s roll of distinguished alumni. The information was compiled by Dr. James S. Ruby, Executive Secretary of the Alumni Association. Additional names will appear in subsequent issues of the Georgetown Alumni Magazine.

Mudd, Dr. Samuel A., 1855, sentenced to life imprisonment at Fort Jefferson, Dry Tortugas for setting the fractured leg of John Wilkes Booth.

Mudd, Sydney E., Sr., ’77, Member of Congress from Maryland, 1890-1891 and 1897-1911.
