Copyright 1959 Georgetown University Alumni Magazine
A year or so ago, there appeared in the pages of the Chicago Sunday Tribune an article entitled "The Ten Best American Universities." The institutions chosen for the "ten best" classification were examined as to several things, "Faculty," "Quality of Research as Measured by Publication," "Student Body Selected for Superior Scholastic Aptitude, Intellectual Curiosity, and Devotion to Study," "Physical Facilities," and lastly, "The Ethos of an Institution—Whether It Has the Character of a Community of Scholars.

Nowhere in these norms of rating do I find anything about the values of the content of scholarship, of the validity and strength of curriculum, of the end purposes to be achieved by all this scholarship, of the end-product of scholarship. And without these, I think the whole judgment and rating of the "ten best universities" becomes hollow and meaningless. It is concerned with the external, the visible, the corpus of the universities, and fails to penetrate to the spirit.

There is little doubt that by application of these norms as they stand, the University of Moscow might rate equally high, or possibly even higher than any or all of our best ten.

I could wish, for instance, that there were spelled out some more attention to the "ethic" of the institutions—since the "ethic" enters into the consideration of the "ethos," both etymologically and in fact.

Let us look briefly at the "ethos" of our American education in general. It is undeniable that, apart from those institutions of learning which have retained the religious aspect and motivation in their spirit and in their instruction, American education is77ampantly secularistic and materialistic. Its objectives are in the main confined to the material aspects of life, its horizons bounded by the short span between man's birth and his passing, and its end product is judged in terms of wealth, power, and influence.

Our education reflects our way of life—and just at present our way of life is largely taken up with the material things, with the pursuit of pleasure, with the satisfaction of every possible desire, real or fictitious. Our standard of living is adjudged in terms of creature comforts, of automobiles and refrigerators and television sets; the luxuries of a former day have become the necessities of today, and any deprivation seems to make our lives less worthwhile, if not totally undesirable. To be sure, we are not a nation of austerity—we can on occasion make sacrifices, but we rarely do so willingly or freely, as a voluntary act of self-restraint and character building. It is not surprising, then, if the same spirit of secularism, of confinement within the purview of the here and now, should have crept into our education. On the contrary, it is inevitable, since the ideas of religion are either professedly excluded from so many of our schools, or studiously ignored, as having no bearing on the purpose or the processes of education.

It can be safely asserted that there is an indisputable connection between one's philosophy of life, and one's philosophy of education. For the ultimate product of education, in the real sense, would necessarily seem to be the inculcation in the students of a philosophy of life. Education is not an end in itself, scholarship is not an end in itself—both are means to something further, and the error of not keeping that further end in view can only result in a barren scientism and sterile adoration of learning for its own sake. This is not a new error in human experience. It is an error that has often been made in the past, when, for instance, the Greeks equated knowledge with wisdom, with power, and with virtue. But there is a wide and a vast gulf between... learning as such, and the development of the whole man, which is the purported end of education and learning.

One might quite justifiably ask, for instance in the adjudication of the ten best law schools just what philosophy of law is basic to their courses—positivist, mechanistic, behavioristic, deterministic, so taken with the intricacies and quiddities of legality as to lose sight of the true ideal of justice, the true ideas of right and of obligation as entities flowing from the total nature of man, rather than as imposed on him from without.

Equally, in the "ten best" medical schools, the question would necessarily arise of their fundamental philosophy of the healing arts, which intimately implicates the total philosophy of life. For a medical school is not primarily a place for the training of mere practitioners or skilled craftsmen, it properly begins and ends with the development of men deeply imbued with a reverence for life, for the preservation of life, for the dignity of each individual, and with the realization that suffering and death are not unmixed evils, in the total view of man and of his destiny.

Speaking to an audience of Georgetown men, I do not have to tell you at great length what we consider to be the "ethos" of our University. It is a philosophy of education and of life, which embraces the whole man, body and spirit, which looks to the total purpose of man's life here on earth and hereafter. Our objection has always been that public, non-sectarian, "neutral" schools simply do not touch an area which we hold of prime importance.

We want our youth trained in the humanities, and in the sciences and in the arts; we want them prepared to live in a competitive society and in a material world. But we also want them trained in the realities of the spirit, we want them to develop in the things of God as well as in the things of man. We teach them mathematics and physics and chemistry, and all the rest, but we want to teach them also the meaning of prudence, and of justice, and of fortitude and temperance. We want them trained as expertly as possible in the humanitarian and sociological subjects—but we want them at the same time to develop in the things of God as well as in the things of men.

We want them to be leaders, to be successful in life—but we want them to have a true and a right judgment of what constitutes success, we want them to avoid the error of mistaking means for ends. In a final word, of all the lessons we impart, we want the most telling and the most lasting and influential lesson of their lives to be that which our Lord Himself proposed to us in His piercing question—"What does it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and suffer the loss of his own soul?" Our "ethos" does not overlook the man in time—but equally, it does not and will not overlook the man in eternity. Both are our concern, and neither can be neglected without irreparable loss.

I suppose that the ideals, the purposes, and the spirit of any institution of learning are at least germinally signified by their chosen mottoes and escutcheons. Otherwise, they would be at best meaningless decoration, at worst shallow hypocrisy.

I am proud to think that these things are amply and well depicted on our Georgetown Seal, so wisely chosen by our forebears of long ago. And I hope that this Seal which you see so often, will always have real meaning for all of you, who have lived and worked under this aegis. For we have there the eagle, which signifies our American way of life, as an expression of the gratitude we feel for the freedoms which our country guarantees us. In his right talon, the eagle holds a globe and calipers—signifying the natural and the social sciences, which are one part of our education, in the other, the cross of religion—equally a part of Georgetown education. And above all is the lyre—the traditional symbol of the truly liberal and educated. And the motto—"Utraque Unum"—both are one. In the development of the harmonious and fully educated man, religion and knowledge both play their part. In the search for truth, and in the imparting of truth which is the ideal of the University, religion and learning flow together—for there is but one source of truth, whether in the order of nature or of grace.

May this motto and its meaning, impressed on you in your student days at Georgetown, impart lasting and fruitful meaning to you in all your life and actions.

Correction

A number of Alumni have written to inquire concerning a purported statement of the Dean of Georgetown College quoted in the February 2, 1959, issue of Newsweek magazine. The following letter was sent to Newsweek by Father Sellinger.

Editor-in-Chief

Newsweek Magazine

Newsweek Building

Broadway and 42nd Street

New York 36, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

In your article of February 2 entitled "Catholic Soul-Searching," I regret to say that my remark was not only taken out of context, but was misquoted and misinterpreted.

I trust that this will be corrected.

Sincerely yours,

Joseph A. Sellinger, S. J.,

Dean
Seismological Observatory

by Rev. Bernard McConnell, S.J.

Georgetown (GEO) is the name used by seismologists to designate the Seismological Observatory at Georgetown University. Six seismographs now operate continually day and night in the vault beneath the College quadrangle. Set on piers imbedded in the Hilltop rock, these instruments are ready at any moment to record earth vibrations caused by distant earthquakes.

The photographic records are processed twice daily at 7 a.m. and 7 p.m., E.S.T., and register major earthquakes occurring in any part of the world. Because the liquid core of the earth hampers the transmission of earthquake vibrations from the far side of the globe, the best-registered earthquakes occur in this hemisphere.

With a modern short-period vertical seismograph, purchased last year, a minor earthquake is recorded about every fourth day somewhere within 6,000 miles of Georgetown. The arrival time of the very first wave together with other identifying phases is reported immediately to the Preliminary Determination of Epicenter Office of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey here in Washington.

Similar reports are received by the P.D.E. Office over cable, by telephone, and by postal card from other seismograph stations throughout the world. At times Georgetown is the first station reporting since it is so close. From the reported arrival times of the first waves the Government scientists then determine the exact time and place of the earthquake. Within several days the precise conclusions of P.D.E., together with the names of the stations reporting, are mailed to seismologists in all parts of the world.

A typical list of reporting stations might include: COL, FORD, GEO, GUAM, HARV, PAL, WEST, etc. Frequently, the only indication of an earthquake on the Georgetown records is found on the short-period seismograph and closely resembles in size and shape this printed “W”.

Approximately once a month the Galitzin seismographs record a major earthquake. Earth waves may be recorded for as long as six or eight hours. Rev. Frederick W. Sohon, S.J., Observatory Director, recalls a day when eight earthquakes were recorded within twenty-four hours. The record of each earthquake overlapped the next so that the whole day’s record was filled with vibrations. In the record of each major earthquake are good indications of where the quake occurred, for the direction from which the underground vibrations and the surface waves arrive in addition to the time interval between vibration groups show the direction and the distance of the epicenter.

This is the kind of information which the news services and the public desire. Major earthquakes are quickly reported by telephone to the Washington Star or Post, to the Associated Press, and to United Press International. Thus the Georgetown reports may be seen in newspapers or heard on radio and television news programs, coast to coast.

After the P.D.E. card is received, a careful restudy of the earthquake record is made. New phases are identified; uncertainties are resolved; errors are corrected. Revised readings are listed in the Station Bulletin and forwarded to the Central Station of the Jesuit Seismological Association at St. Louis University. For every major earthquake the Central Station publishes data from Georgetown and the other Jesuit seismograph stations in the United States. Several years later this data will be included in the International Seismological Summary published at the Kew Observatory, England.

The Georgetown Seismological Observatory was founded by Rev. Francis A. Tondorf, S.J., in 1909 as the College Journal testifies, although Father Tondorf preferred to give 1911 as the opening date of the observatory. Through a generous gift from a Georgetown alumnus, Patrick H. O'Donnell, A.B. '92, A.M. '93, LL. B. '94, Father Tondorf purchased a horizontal and a vertical Wiechert seismograph—each of 80 kg. pendulum mass. He first operated these instruments at the base of the South Tower, but the wind caused even this massive 212 ft. bastion to sway and tilt the earth.

Searching for a more stable base, Father Tondorf was forced to move the instruments to the more sheltered vault beneath the quadrangle. In 1912 a pair of Bosch photographic seismographs of 200 grams pendulum mass were installed in a separate concrete building on top of Observatory Hill.

Father Tondorf wanted nothing but German-made instruments. He imported two Bosch-Onomori mechanically recording seismographs of 25 kg. each and a Mainka two-component conical pendulum seismograph of 145 kg., each of which were installed in the narrowing quadrangle vault. Then a 200 kg. Wiechert was added. The older 80 kg. Wiechert was sent to Guatemala City; the Bosch-Omori seismographs were donated to Weston College. Later when the electro-magnetic photo-recording Galitzin instruments were purchased, the Bosch photographic instruments and the 200 kg. Wiechert were loaned to Woodstock College.

For many years Father Tondorf was aided by Brother Charles J. Ramage, S.J. The devoted brother kept the instruments in perfect condition and changed the records faithfully every day. He assisted Father Tondorf when he placed a Cambridge-type vertical Galitzin seismograph in a corner of the vault in 1923. Three years later two Cambridge-type Galitzins were placed in a crypt under Dahlgren Chapel. With the acquisition of these electromagnetic instruments the Georgetown station operated at the highest practicable degree of magnification. Further improvements could be made only by acquiring additional seismographs of longer and shorter periods than the Galitzins, then Father Tondorf died on November 29, 1929.

Father Sohon was appointed to succeed Father Tondorf as Director of the Seismological Observatory. During the summers of 1930, 1931, and 1932 and during the scholastic year of 1931-32, Rev. John S. O'Connor, S.J., now Head of the Department of Physics at St. Joseph's College, was in charge during the temporary absence of Father Sohon.

In December of 1930, Father Sohon, and Rev. William J. Tynan, S.J., moved the horizontal Galitzins from the Dahlgren crypt to Observatory Hill. Later Father O'Connor transferred them to the quadrangle vault where they are operating today.

Father Sohon published the Georgetown Seismological Dispatches from 1929 to 1941. These were summaries of news wire accounts written by reporters at the scene of earthquakes. Father Sohon also published the Georgetown Seismological Bulletin from 1929 through 1945. His volume entitled Introduction to Theoretical Seismology has been studied carefully by seismologists everywhere. He also has done excellent research on the effect of tropical cyclones in generating microseisms.

During World War II, he assisted the Navy Department in its effort to develop a seismic method of tracking hurricanes. This was the only feasible method when radio silence was mandatory and enemy submarines were prowling the Atlantic. In 1952 Father Sohon became seriously ill. After several heroic attempts he found that he was no longer able to run the seismographs, but there was no one to assist him and no one to take his place.

In the summer of 1957 Father Rector asked Rev. Bernard McConnell, S.J., a teacher of freshman mathematics, to reactivate the seismograph station. Rev. Henry Miller, S.J., who had just finished Theology at Woodstock was interested in seismology and seismic prospecting, but he was destined to study Geophysics with a Seismology Major at Columbia University—Father Sohon's own alma mater. It could be as much as five years until he finished his studies and there was no sense in letting the seismographs deteriorate in idleness.

The coils of the North-South Galitzin by this time were so badly corroded that their resistance to the electric current generated by incoming earthquakes was almost infinite. Acid from the celluloid cover had eaten away the tiny wire. Fortunately, replacement coils from the U. S. Bureau of Standards were available so that immediate repairs could be made. The three components of the Galitzin seismograph and the two components of the Mainka were operating regularly by September 1, 1957. Reports were sent regularly to the P.D.E. Office of the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey. Because the Galitzin seismographs had to be recalibrated, reports to the news services were withheld for one year, until September of 1958.

Beginning in March of 1958 and through the following summer, the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey assisted in a series of tests to improve the Georgetown instrumentation. Mr. Leonard Murphy, a Fordham alumnus, was Director of the Preliminary Determination of Epicenter. He requested Mr. Frank Werner, his chief instrument man, to set up the tests. A short-period vertical Wilson-Lamison seismograph was placed in the quadrangle vault. Another was operated simultaneously in the seismic vault that overhangs the gymnasium. These instruments recorded four times as many earthquakes as the Galitzins. They worked well at both sites, although the quadrangle instrument showed unusual vibrations when the students took their meals in the Maguire and Ryan dining rooms. The six-hundred-pound gong named Sancta Maria, Sedes Sapientiae, thumping the hours on top of the Healy Tower, left her marks on the record. The precise sixty-per-minute beat of the R.O.T.C. drum and bugle corps appeared faithfully once or twice each Tuesday afternoon. Thus, it was decided that the site on top of Observatory Hill was a better location for the Wilson-Lamison seismograph.

Because of the excellent performance of these test instruments a Wilson-Lamison seismograph and recorder were made for Georgetown by the Times Instrument Co. of Washington, D. C., according to specifications of the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey. Rev. Joseph J. Lynch, S.J., of Fordham University, supplied the needed galvanometer. The instrument was placed in the vault by the end of the summer and remains there today.

Rev. Eugene T. Kenedy, S.J., C '98, celebrated his 60th Anniversary as a Jesuit on January 17 at the Church of St. Francis Xavier in New York City.

1902
Hon. Tisdale J. Touart, G '02, is Presiding Judge of the Court of General Sessions of Mobile County, Alabama, with 31 years of service.

1903
Dr. J. Ernest Smith, D '03, of Washington, D. C., has retired from active practice.

1904
Lawrence C. Atkinson, C '04, is President of the Jackson Brewing Company Employees Federal Credit Union in New Orleans, La. At Georgetown, he pulled the stroke oar in the Georgetown Varsity Crew which defeated Navy on the Hudson in 1903. Navy's stroke oar was pulled by Midshipman (now Retired Admiral) Chester W. Nimtz.

1905
Dr. William B. Harrison, M '03, has retired after 17 years as Medical Director of the Northeast Region of Athens, Ga.

1906
James E. C olliflower, C '06, L '10, was made a Knight of St. Gregory by Pope John XXIII.

1907
Charles P. Maloney, C '07, Washington businessman, became a Knight of St. Gregory in December, by appointment of Pope John XXIII.

1908
After fourteen years of service as Sheriff of Providence County, R. I., Hon. Michael F. Costello, L '08, has stepped down upon the election of a Republican Governor.

1911
Adrien F. Busick, L '11, is a "semi-retired" attorney. After graduation, he was on the legal staff of the Federal Trade Commission as Chairman of the Board of Review, Acting Chief Counsel, and Assistant Chief Counsel in charge of appellate work. After resigning in 1929, he entered the firm of which Joseph E. Davies was head—now known as Davies, Richberg, Tidings, Lands, and Duff. Mr. Busick is now carried on the letterhead as "of counsel."

1912
Harry Cusack, L '12, is in semi-retirement in Venice, Fla. He keeps himself very busy doing publicity for the Venice Little Theatre, the Men's Club of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, the Venice Garden Association and the Civil Air Patrol Group of Venice, all as a volunteer.

Col. James P. Hamill, Director of the Army Ordnance Ballistic Research Laboratories, who has played a key role in the multi-million dollar missile program, won’t be 40 until 30 June, which happens to be the last day of the fiscal year.

Few persons anywhere can match his record in the field of rockets and missiles.

Before the close of WWII, Colonel Hamill, as chief of a technical intelligence team, helped Maj. Gen. H. N. Toftoy bring 125 German rocket scientists to the United States, including Dr. Wernher von Braun.

At the age of 27, having already won the Legion of Merit for his analysis of German fire control during the war, Colonel Hamill was charged with the mission of initiating the Army’s rocket research program at Ft. Bliss, Tex.

Subsequently, Colonel Hamill worked closely with General Toftoy and other Army Ordnance missile pioneers in assignments at the Pentagon and Huntsville Arsenal, Ala.

A graduate of Fordham College who did graduate work at Columbia and New York University, Colonel Hamill won a law degree from Georgetown University in 1955 and was admitted that year to the American Bar Association.

Before succeeding Col. Charles E. Register as BRL Director in November 1957, Colonel Hamill—a colonel only since last August—directed the Army’s missile testing program at White Sands Missile Range, N. M., for two years.

The Alumni MAGAZINE is proud to reprint this article from the January 17 issue of the Army, Navy, Air Force Journal. Forwarded by Maj. Gen. H. N. Toftoy, USA, Commander, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., the article was accompanied by a letter which stated:

“I forward this to you for whatever satisfaction it might afford you and your institution in knowing of his distinguished scientific and humanitarian contributions to a rapidly expanding pioneer technology.

“Much is being said about the deficiencies which exist in American education today. Colonel Hamill, along with many of our other scientists, demonstrates the positive qualities of educational institutions such as yours.

“In my opinion, his distinguished career is not only a measure of himself as an individual but also, in part, that of those who taught him.”

Colonel Hamill and his associates are currently anticipating the completion of the new ultra high-speed computer being built in cooperation with the Bureau of Standards—all part of the Ballistic Research Laboratories, bid for the future.
