Dear Georgetown Graduate:

It is fitting as we honor our past with the celebration of our 125th anniversary, that we look to the future of the legal community. Georgetown University Law Center has increasingly responded to change in our 125 year history. In the last four years alone we have expanded the Edward Bennett Williams Law Library so that it holds the eighth largest academic law collection in the nation, we have built the Gewirz Student Center with apartments to house more than half of the entering class, we have continued to strengthen the faculty, and we have listened to our students and responded to their concerns.

As the Class of 1995 graduates, you take with you much more than a diploma. You have become part of a great tradition of learning, public service, intellectual curiosity and warm memories of Georgetown University Law Center. We wish you the best of luck and the best of life.

Sincerely,

Judith Areen

SPECIAL EVENTS
Gilbert & Sullivan

The Georgetown Gilbert & Sullivan Society entertained the GULC community with three plays this year. The group performed the Broadway musical Pippin in the fall, which was a smashing success. The cast of Pippin is pictured below. Wendy Wasserstein’s romantic comedy Isn’t It Romantic was produced as the winter drama. Finally, the group sang and danced their way through Gilbert & Sullivan’s Pirates of Penzance, which featured Father Alexi as a rogue pirate complete with golden hoop earring. If you didn’t see it — YOU SHOULD HAVE!!
Halloween at GULC
The Barristers' Ball is Georgetown Law Center's annual semi-formal spring dance. This year's festivities were held at the National Press Club in downtown Washington, D.C. The gala event attracts a large number of students every year, many who are seeking a last opportunity to celebrate with their friends at the Law Center before the seemingly endless experience of preparing for and taking final exams begins. This year, students enjoyed an open bar and danced the night away from 9:00 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. to such dance classics as "I will survive."
Summer in Florence

GULC once again travelled to the hills of Tuscany to study law and drink wine. Those who attended the program completed three to six credits in a month, which for most meant two exams in two days. You try to outline without a computer!! But they also travelled Italy, got to know their professors (how about those recommendations), learned a lot, and drank wine. Oh, and did I mention that there was lots of wine.
Class of 1995

You started your legal careers at Georgetown three or four years ago. First, you came to orientation where Dean Bellamy tried to convey to you what a brief was about. Then you bought your books and started studying for the first class. Woe to that poor first soul who was ever called upon in your section. You'll never forget that day!! Throughout that first semester, you tried to study assiduously, often wondering what your professor was talking about, wondering if you should be in a study group, wondering if you should quit your study group, wondering if law school was for you. But you stuck it out and survived fall exams, even if just barely. Second semester went more smoothly — until Write On. Right after finishing your Civil Procedure exam which you passed thanks only to Gilbert or Glannon, you bought your Write On packet. Now you were expected to withstand your fatigue and write great thoughts about the law. Somehow you made it through, and got on one of the many journals at Georgetown.

Second year, you were instantly inundated with OCI. You spent the next month coming to school in the same blue suit trying to take your way through classes you had barely attended. Lots of you didn't actually get jobs through OCI, but that's OK because you probably didn't want to sell your soul to Skadden anyway. This year you learned that most of your professors aren't actually tyrants after all. You slaved away doing blue book assignments for your journal — is this really what you broke your back for during Write On?

This year, those of you who took those core courses during second year with the bar exam firmly in mind finally got to take those classes which actually seemed interesting. Those of you who took those interesting courses during second year suddenly had a schedule that read Tax I, Tax II, Corporations, Evidence, etc. You passed the MPRE — did they really teach us this stuff in Professional Responsibility?

And now you're graduating. Your education is over — except for bar review. And all the stuff that you need to know that somehow you didn't learn. Oh well, at least you have your degree. And probably a boatload of debt. During your years at Georgetown you saw your tuition bill surpass every other American law school. But that's OK because 93% of you will have a legal job six months after graduation. The other 7% are probably in politics or business.

Congratulations. You have a lot of reasons to be proud.
Boatloads of students, n'est-ce pas?

Balance, grace, and strength in JD combined.

... this LLM'er ain't bad either.

But she knows where it's really at.
CLASS OF 1995
MASTER OF LAWS

You are a VERY diverse group of people.

Many of you are at Georgetown studying tax and will be graduating from one the country’s premiere LL.M. programs in taxation. After graduation, most of you will go to work trying to get the rest of us to consult you BEFORE we make the deal. Others of you will work in policy making positions.

Many of you are foreign students who are at Georgetown to learn about America’s common law system. With this information, you can become a member of the bar in one of the American states and practice there. But a lot of you will choose to return to your countries and use your new knowledge in a myriad of ways.

Others of you are getting LL.M.s in other specialized areas such as Securities and Financial Regulation, Advocacy, International and Comparative Law, and Labor and Employment Law. You are here for many reasons. Some of you are seeking a substitute for pre-law school experience to help you get your foot in the door. Others are here to learn the complexities of a certain area of the law in a orderly fashion. Still others are on their way to being law school professors.

Whatever your reasons for choosing GULC for your advanced study, you are now an expert in your field. Congratulations.

They tortured you, made you cry, grilled you under a spotlight and made you look stupid, sometimes. But ultimately, they are the ones you remember forever, your first year law professors. You had Supreme Court clerks, members of the Supreme Court bar and famous authors. And just think, they expected you to be just like them. You were also saddened when Professor Greenhalgh passed away, but he, like all the others, will live on in your memory.

Journals, journals, journals. Like rare, psychedelic mushrooms springing up from under the cynical shadows of Capital Hill, they provide Georgetown and the legal community a smorgasbord of nourishing intellectual delicacies upon which judicial minds can readily feast. This year, the Georgetown International Environmental Law Review’s initiation of their authoritative Annual Review of International Environmental Law was one such morsel. Georgetown’s other standard, yet unique menu offerings included the Georgetown Immigration Law Journal, the only student-edited law journal devoted solely to immigration law, the Georgetown Journal on Fighting Poverty, the first law journal in the nation (established 1993) dedicated to the study of poverty, and the Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics, the nation’s only quarterly law review devoted to, well, you know. And let’s not forget our other standby favorites, the Law & Policy in International Business, the Tax Lawyer, and the American Criminal Law Review. And of course there is the Georgetown Law Journal, which, according to one Justice Thomas, earned the distinction of publishing some of the most theoretically obscure and useless articles of the year... way to go Law Journal.

Clinics

GULC’s clinical program was rated number one in the country this year by U.S. News & World Report. And rightly so. Our many clinical offerings provide a needed service to the community while providing valuable practical experience to students. This year, clinic students did everything from teaching in D.C. high schools to working with state policy groups on the impact of the new GATT agreement to representing clinic clients before a multitude of forums.

One of the most popular options at GULC, the programs are competitive. Generally there are more than twice as many applicants as there are openings. However, with a student-faculty ratio otherwise unknown within these hallowed halls, students who are admitted gain an unparalleled learning experience. In addition to practical skills, such as litigation, negotiation, and drafting, students also gain first hand experience with ethical issues that lawyers face daily.

GULC’s clinics are Appellate Litigation, Center for Applied Legal Studies, Criminal Justice (D.C. and Maryland), Federal Legislation, Harrison Institute (Housing and State Legislation), Institute for Public Representation, Juvenile Justice, Sex Discrimination, Street Law (High Schools and Corrections), and Law Students in Court.
STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

Georgetown University Law Center’s student organizations cater to the wide array of interests of a diverse student body at the Law Center. Student groups have formed to support those aspects of student development that take place outside the classroom by providing a wide range of activities to broaden and enhance the personal and professional lives of Georgetown’s law students. Groups such as La Alianza de Derecho, Georgetown Jewish Law Students Association, the Black Law Students Association, and the Irish-American Law Students Association are dedicated to preserving cultural heritages and celebrating the diversity of the student body.

Other groups have formed to preserve and express differing political views amongst members of the student body. Such groups include the Federalist Society, the Republican National Law Students, and Georgetown Law Democrats. The Federalist Society, composed of over 200 students, proudly claims to have brought more speakers to the law center than any other student group in 1994-95 to challenge the “sacred cows and orthodoxies of the opponents to the Founder’s vision of a republic, created with limited powers to preserve ordered liberty.” The Republican National Law Students asserts that it is a “group of fiercely free-thinking guerillas” which “holds down the fort until the country is once again liberated from the chains of bureaucracy.”

Other groups, such as the Equal Justice Foundation (EJF), are dedicated to serving the public. The EJF’s principal activity is raising subsidies for and administering a student-funded fellowship program that provides financial assistance for student summer internships in public interest organizations. They primarily raise funds through a fall auction, a 5K run, and a Fund Drive. This year, they recognized Ralph Nader at an awards ceremony for his years of public service.

As is readily apparent, the list of student organizations at Georgetown Law Center is broad. The size, caliber, and diversity of the student body provides opportunities for the development and promotion of enough organizations to meet the needs and interests of each and every law student at Georgetown.
